LOSS OF SHIPS IN HUGE FIGHT IS INCREASED

British Admit Destroyers Went Down—Germans Lost a Cruiser.

TWO ADMIRALS DIE.

EUROPEAN WAR SUMMARY

Losses in North sea battle mount. Two British admirals killed. London says two more German large craft were sunk.

Germans slowly but surely closing in on Verdun. Village six miles from stronghold captured.

Rome reports check of Austrian advance all along line. Vienna avers troops continue to push on.

Two British and three German steamers sunk, London and Berlin reports.

(By Cable to The Chicago Tribune.)

LONDON, June 3.—Latest reports received from British official sources and from neutrals increase the magnitude of the North sea battle and the losses on both sides, but indicate that the encounter was not the defeat at first reported and in no wise a disaster.

It is officially admitted that the British lost three battle cruisers, three cruisers, and eight destroyers. Added to the ships hitherto reported lost are the destroyers Shark and Nomad.

TOTAL GERMAN LOSSES.

The German losses are believed to have been about the same number of ships, although a much less aggregate of tonnage. It is officially admitted in Berlin that the German cruiser Frauenlob of 18,600 tons and the small cruiser Elbing were lost.

It is reported—but this is denied by Berlin and not confirmed by any official source—that the dreadnaught Hindenburg, the newest and most powerful German craft, was lost.

Another dispatch says eight German warships have taken refuge in Danish waters. They will be ordered to leave at once or intern. The Brtish fleet is reported awaiting them just outside the Danish waters.

BRITISH LOSE 4,000 MEN.

The first reports of heavy loss of life unhappily have not been revised. Great Britain mourns for more than 4,000 of her best seamen and the whole nation is oppressed with sadness, which is reflected in the faces of all the people of London.

There were some 6,000 men on the ships which sank, and only a few hundred have been saved. The horrors of modern naval warfare, far exceeding those when wooden ships fought and continued to float even when they ceased to be fighting units, were realized to their utmost.

From five of the largest ships which went under, with complements totaling more than 4,000 men, only seven junior officers and a few seamen were rescued.

REAR ADMIRAL HOOD KILLED.

Admiral David Beatty, commander of the flying squadron, who led in the first onslaught, brought his flagship out safely, but his second in command, Rear Admiral the Hon. Horace Lambert Hood, died when his ship, the Invincible, went down.

Both Admirals Beatty and Hood married American women. Admiral Beatty is the husband of the former Ethel Field of Chicago. Admiral Hood's widow formerly was Mrs. Edith Nickerson, daughter of Dr. J. J. Ransom of Burlington, Ia.

Rear Admiral Arbuthnot went down with his ship, the Defense, and others known to have died were Capts. Sowerby, Cay, and Prowx. The first named formerly was naval attaché at Washington.

NO QUARTER ASKED OR GIVEN.

The battle was one in which no quarter was asked or even possible. There were no surrenders, and the ships which lost went down and carried with them virtually the whole crews.

Only the Warrior, which was towed part way from the scene of battle to a British port, was an exception.

Of some thousand men on the Queen Mary, only a corporal's guard is accounted for. The same is true of the Invincible, while there are no survivors reported from the Indefatigable, the Defense or the Black Prince.

There are stories of ships sinking with a great explosion; of crews going down singing the national anthem; of mer-

Society Women Get Big Thrill Out of Parade

WEARY BUT HAPPY

BY A WOMAN WHO MARCHED
[KATHERINE SYNON.]

Blare and flare of martial music, surge and roar of swaying crowds beating the bass of a great orchestra of humanity, banners flaunting the glory of red, white, and blue; men and women and children, hundreds and thousands of us, waiting the signal to march; then, swiftly, the signal to march. Then with a cadet band swinging ahead, and thirteen veterans of the U. S. Grant post, No. 28, playing bravely on the fifes and drums, there broke the melody:

O, say can you see—

and the women's division, under Mrs. Samuel T. Chase's marshaling, swung into line.

We were all recruits. There was hardly a woman who had ever marched before for any cause. There was a moment's confusion until Mrs. Chase called "Right, dress! Get in line, every one of you!"

Mrs. Palmer in Line.

Mrs. Potter Palmer was engaged in conversation with a crossing policeman when the call to places came. She had just been expressing her views on preparedness with this member of the "beauty squad," who had not guessed her identity. She hurried into line and prepared to march.

One group, standing apart, heard the summons and a moment later these women, including Mrs. George McLaughlin, Mrs. Honoré Palmer, Mrs. William Waller, Mrs. Benjamin Carpenter, and Mrs. Hobart Chatfield-Taylor, were standing at attention.

It had been a great moment, crammed with the high thrills of that glory that comes with the apprehension of the real significance of the star spangled banner—a moment to be set among the recollections of the sight of veterans marching ahead of us, one carrying an old confederate flag with eight stars.

Catch Spirit of '76.

The women had caught within their hearts the "Spirit of '76." Not merely because Michigan boulevard stretched its splendor between a half million watchers did these well known women of Chicago hold their heads high as we set forth. It was the thought that the great-grandmothers of some of them had watched the oxen carts roll over the sands while they had been doing their share in the building of a nation, that this group of feminine recruits squared their shoulders and fell in.

There was the woman who had come to Mrs. Chase just before we started with a request to be set in line. "I don't belong to any organization or company," she said, "and I never marched before, though I'm nearing fifty. But my grandfather fought in the Mexican war, and my father went with Sherman to the sea and I want to be in this parade."

"Do you think my feet will hold out?" Mrs. Palmer asked Mrs. Winterbotham as the blocks of pavement went from asphalt into cobblestones. Corner after corner the society woman tramped, glorying in the thrill of the parade. Finally Mrs. Palmer dropped out and took a place in a stand.

Some of the Marchers.

Some of the feminine believers in preparedness in the 300 members of the division were Mrs. Arrick Kirk, Mrs. Lockwood Honoré, Mrs. C. Morse Ely, Mrs. Charles Pike, Mrs. George McKinlock, Mrs. William J. Chalmers, Mrs. Joseph Cudahy, Miss Helvetia Orr, Miss Edith Hoyt, and Miss Rosa Garibaldi, who is to be married in a few weeks.

"It was even better than I expected," said Mrs. Chase. "I don't know when I'll ever find another thrill like it."

Weary, worn a bit, not quite as trim and not quite as gay as we had been, we came to the end of the line. For us the parade was over; and yet not altogether over. For any woman marcher will remember with pride one day of sunshine when she marched behind the colors.

TWO KILLED, ONE HURT, AS AUTO AND CAR CRASH.

A. F. Dornte of Fort Wayne, Ind., Believed One of Victims—Collision at Speed Heard for Blocks.

Two men were killed and another seriously injured late last night when a street car struck an automobile at Fullerton and Tripp avenues. One of the dead is supposed to be A. F. Dornte of Fort Wayne, Ind.

Both bodies were removed by the police to undertaking rooms at 4309 Armitage avenue. The injured man was rushed to St. Elizabeth's hospital. He was unconscious and suffering apparently from a skull fracture and internal injuries.

Both street car and automobile were going at great speed when they collided, and the impact was heard for blocks.

GRIM TOOLS OF WAR.

BY SHEPPARD BUTLER.

The last civilian marcher in the great preparedness parade trailed past the reviewing stand at the Art institute shortly after 6 o'clock and reached the point of dismissal west of the loop about 7:15.

Then fell the curious dead silence that comes after hours of the tramp of marching feet and the blare of bands have made the ears accustomed to a steady pulse of sound. For an hour there was no more parade. Darkness came on.

But the crowds remained. They had been told there was more coming, and they were right.

THE SOLDIERS COME.

Far over toward the lake, in Grant park, a stir of activity began about a little cluster of tents, horses and lounging men. Here Battery C of the Illinois national guard had pitched camp the night before after its hike from Fort Sheridan to join the ranks of the paraders. Here Battery B had congregated, and also a part of the cavalry contingent.

At a signal the men jumped to their feet, flung the saddles and traces on the horses and stood at attention. A thin, clear bugle call floated across the open spaces to the crowd waiting in Michigan avenue. A moment later the troops filed across the high ground, their forms sharply outlined against the sky by the setting sun.

At various points around Van Buren street and Michigan avenue other uniformed contingents joined them. Shortly after 7, just as the end of the civilian line was being dismissed at Market street, the parade swung into line again at its starting point.

SOMETHING DIFFERENT.

It was a continuation of the other march, but it was different. Along the curb now automobile trucks bearing powerful floodlights had wheeled quickly into place, and before the crowd knew it were bathing the asphalt in brilliant light. Down the canyons of the streets the office buildings suddenly were illuminated, throwing the thousands of lazy flags into bold relief.

Then the crowd, quiet and good natured still, for all its weariness, got what it was waiting for. Down the street, in spectacular contrast to the marchers who had gone before, swung the big band of the naval training station at Lake Bluff. Behind, in solid ranks, extending from curb to curb, came the "jackies," their white leggings flashing in and out in machine-like unison.

These were marchers who were not only willing, but knew how. A cheer followed them down the line, and a smile leaped into Gen. Barry's eyes as he resumed his task of saluting the colors.

BAND LEADS INFANTRY.

Next came the First Regiment band, leading the infantry of the national guard. Four regiments of these there were—the First, the Seventh, the Second, and the Eighth—all in khaki and each with its own band and mounted regimental officers. The Eighth, the Negro regiment, received its applause stoically, without a grin.

The Illinois naval reserves followed with their wicked little field pieces. Then came the First field artillery and a regiment of visitors, the Third infantry of the Indiana national guard from Valparaiso.

CADETS IN WAR GARB.

The gaunt guns and squat caissons of the two batteries of artillery came next, and then a murmur of interest went over the crowd as the gray-clad cadets from the Northwestern Military academy hove into view. These had the most warlike equipment of all—a file of silent neutral tinted automobiles, one an armored car, another a radio signal establishment, a third a field kitchen, and so on. And they crept by in the half light like so many grim menacing ghosts.

The national guard signal corps and Col. Foreman's troopers of the First cavalry followed. Abruptly, a little file of familiar workaday policemen brought up the rear, and the spectators knew that the greatest parade they or any American had ever seen was over.

CHICAGO'S PARADE LARGEST IN THE HISTORY OF AMERICA

The preparedness parade in Chicago yesterday was the largest in American history in point of numbers participating in a single day. The greatest parades, in their chronological order, have been as follows:

Organizations.	City.	Date.	Number.
Army of the Potomac	Washington	May 23, 1865	85,000
Gen. Sherman's army	Washington	May 24, 1865	115,000
Centennial's business men	New York	April 30, 1889	45,000
Sound money	Chicago	Oct. 9, 1896	68,307
Sound money	New York	Oct. 31, 1896	99,135
Grant funeral	New York	April 27, 1897	53,516
Dewey parade	New York	Sept. 30, 1899	30,902
Woman suffrage parade	New York	Oct. 23, 1913	25,340
Preparedness parade	Chicago	June 3, 1916	130,214

Perhaps the largest civil parade in Europe in the last thirty years was the home rule opposition procession in Belfast, Ireland, on April 9, 1912, when 150,000 men were reported to have been in line.

CAN YOU FIND A SLIPPER FOR THIS CINDERELLA?

Olive Lane, Who Is 19 and Unmarried, Lost Her Footgear at Van Buren and Michigan.

"Well, I was on my way to march," she told the reporter over the telephone, "and all of a sudden some fellow came along and his foot hooked into mine and my slipper came off and some one must have kicked it and then I was just like Cinderella, only worse, because I wanted to march and I had only one, and it was a new shoe, but even you know that one shoe isn't two shoes when you live way out on the west side.

"Well, some of the soldiers offered to take me to the car on horseback and one fellow offered me his drum for a shoe and another said, 'Here's my horn; let me carry you home in that.' O, it was awful.

"But I want my slipper back. My name is Olive, Olive Lane, and I live at 1416 South Kostner avenue. I lost it at Van Buren street and Michigan avenue. How old am I? Well, it's no secret. I'm 19. And please help me get my slipper back."

Bourke Cockran Excoriates British for "Latest Butchery"—Plan Big Publicity Campaign.

No "funerals" resulted from the mass meeting of the Friends of Irish Freedom held last night in the Auditorium as was predicted in a letter sent to Chief Healey Friday. Neither were the score of policemen stationed in and about the big theater needed.

Enthusiasm ran high, however, when the organization of a great body of Irish-Americans to sweep the United States from coast to coast in an endeavor to free Ireland from English rule was started among the assemblage, estimated at from 2,500 to 3,000 persons.

W. Bourke Cochran of New York was the speaker of the evening, and his excoriation of England's "last butchery of Irish patriots" brought cheer after cheer from the audience. Mr. Cochran compared the sufferings of Ireland to those of Cuba. "The enormity in Cuba," he said, "lasted only ten years, while in Ireland it has been going on for eight centuries.

Both Judge Kickham Scanlan and O'Neill Ryan, the latter of St. Louis, referred to themselves as rebels. Judge Scanlan asserted he was of rebel stock and proud of it.

When Judge Ryan referred to the recent victory of the Germans in the North sea battle he started an outburst of cheering and a prolonged demonstration that he found difficulty in stopping.

BY HENRY M. HYDE.

Prepare!

Providence is surely in favor of preparedness!

If ever a whole city spoke with a single voice it was yesterday.

Under skies that were blue and golden men and women marched all day, and the march continued even during the early part of the night, to the old martial airs of the United States.

Before 5:30 o'clock the total number of participants in the recent New York preparedness parade—125,683, according to the New York Times, which employed the same expert counters as those used here—was surpassed.

By the time the local regiments of the national guard has pasesd in the evening the counting machines stood at exactly 130,214.

A FULL FLEDGED MIRACLE.

Judged from every standpoint, Chicago's parade was a miracle. Within two weeks the whole great demonstration had been organized. Great credit belongs to the men who undertook to turn the idea into a reality. Without their aid it would have been impossible. But above all and first of all the success of the whole great demonstration is due to the people of Chicago. It was as if a great dam had been torn down which held back a vast—and unrealized—reservoir of patriotism.

The whole downtown city of Chicago was abloom with flags. To every one who marched and to the million who watched them go by came a new idea of what the flag stands for, of what it means to the world:

"To protect the flag. To save the republic from possible disaster."

That seemed to be the spirit in which men and women marched. There was about it all a high—almost a holy—feeling of devotion.

EXALTING THE FLAG.

The crowds which stood or sat for hours massed along the downtown streets were quiet and orderly. They watched the flag go by in its hundreds of thousands; they saw it flying everywhere over the streets and against the buildings. They cheered it as it passed. They wore it in their buttonholes.

Led by Maj. Gen. Thomas H. Barry of the United States army in the reviewing stand, they saluted the colors as they passed. They heard the thrilling strains of the old battle songs to which Americans have marched in every war since the revolution.

Whatever may be the immediate effect on the distant congress, surely every one of the marchers went home last night a better American for the day's demonstration. The whole day was an exaltation of the flag.

YOUR FLAG AND MY FLAG.

Because there was nothing violent or noisy or spectacular about either the parade or the crowds, the lesson was driven the much more deeply home. Over and over and over again devotion to the flag of one's country was emphasized.

To many, in the morning, the stars and stripes may have been merely a bit of more or less meaningless bunting. But by nightfall it had become your flag and my flag, to love and defend against any aggression whatever.

Not that the parade lacked impressiveness or beauty. There was a company of gray, broken old men, veterans of the war of '61, who marched not far before the splendid regiment of college boys from the University of Illinois. In the contrast there was enough of pathos to be compelling.

With these men, too, tramped the veterans of the foreign wars. Then came sailors from the old battleship Oregon and men from the regular army and navy and marine corps. Fittingly they were all given a place in the first division of honor, for it is upon such men as these that the flag has had to depend for its safety.

ENDLESS RIVER OF MARCHERS

And behind them formed an almost endless river of men and women, representing practically all of the great trades, businesses, and professions. Each of them carried a flag.

There were whole regiments of young girls in white gowns, and marching by they seemed to say, "The protection of the flag will cover us, also."

Companies of little boy scouts in their trim khaki, with staves and emergency kits over their shoulders, tramped by. Their unspoken message was, "We are beginning to prepare."

And in the whole long day's marching there was no discordant note. Presidents of great banks, railroad companies, and business firms marched by the side of their humblest employés, and all to the common purpose.

PICTURESQUE ARMY FIGURE.

There were plenty of picturesque people and bits of gay color in the day. Maj. Gen. Barry himself, in the reviewing stand, was one of the most interesting.

When one pictures a professional soldier of 60 who has reached the high rank of major general in the United States army, he could find no better figure to fill the frame than Maj. Gen Barry. Tall, slender, with the figure of a boy, his gray mustache lends the last military touch to his whole appearance. To each spectator the sharp click of his salute as the colors went by was a distinct thrill.

THE START.

Promptness was the first virtue of the great parade. On the second of 9 o'clock the first gun of the national salute was sounded in Grant park. On the echo the trumpeters in front of the reviewing stand at the Art institute sounded their salute. Maj. Gen. Barry, U. S. A., tall and trim and soldierly in his dark dress uniform—a wide row of service stripes across his breast—took his place in the center box surrounded by the members of his staff. In the next box was Mayor Thompson, wearing an arm band of the national colors and a smile brighter even than usual.

Within five minutes of the hour the advance division of police was swinging down the avenue in the gorgeous sunshine. Following the first band came a dignified delegation of judges in silk

PRAISE BY GEN. BARRY

New Lakes Department Commander Calls Parade Greatest Patriotic Outburst Since Civil War.

BY MAJ. GEN. T. H. BARRY, U. S. A.
[Commanding Central Department.]

I have seen many large parades, civil and military.

I have commanded some; I have seen large armies in peace and war (Russian), but today is the happiest and most inspiring of my life of more than 60 years, more than 40 of which have been in our army in every grade from the lowest to the highest.

This is the greatest burst of patriotism since the civil war—shows us a united country against any foe whatever.

It is most inspiring to see so many handsome women, old and young—God bless them—in the parade, as it is to see so many of our distinguished citizens. I noted especially former Secretary of War Dickinson.

The most inspiring sight was a sweet young woman on crutches marching along better than many two legged men.

If our women are patriotic our men must be, and all sons will be raised to be soldiers.

Instruct and discipline the thousands of young men of our country—such as paraded today—make them available for service which they must render if they are willing to enjoy the benefits of our great country and we will be fairly prepared and safe.

I feel most highly honored in reviewing such a parade. It is the greatest in the country today—one on which Chicago and all connected with its management are to be congratulated.

BOY SCOUTS WERE GREAT; RED CROSS EXCELLENT; EVERYONE DID WELL

hats and long frock coats, bringing their flags to a salute as they passed the stand. A rank of mounted aids in military uniform, wearing red shoulder sashes, led the way for the members of the executive committee of the preparedness parade, the city council and county employés.

Behind them marched a delegation of city and county employés. At the head was a majority of the city council, ready, apparently, to pass any measure over the mayor's veto.

Band Plays America.

Another band, and there came a solid dark blue block of city firemen, numbering more than a thousand. Another band, that blared into "America" as it passed the stand, and several thousand city employés swung by, marching with almost military precision. All the flags waved a welcome to the mayor.

The Redmen's band, in full war paint, a ferocious chieftain acting as drum major, led the way with "Dixie" for a column of white uniformed city street laborers.

War's Veterans in Line.

A dozen small boys, fifers and drummers, led the way for 200 brave and limping soldiers of the war of '61, who were greeted with the loudest cheers of the morning. Behind them, following twenty splendid flags and guidons, came a soldierly division of veterans of the Spanish war. There was even a solid phalanx of veterans of the battleship Oregon, and the spectators seemed to feel the thrill of reality which these men who had seen service carried with them.

The Society of Santiago de Cuba, veterans of foreign wars, a splendid group from last year's training camp at Fort Sheridan, led the way for the first big single division composed of members of the dry goods trade.

This division was preceded by an enormous flag carried horizontally by 100 men on their shoulders.

Scotch Highlanders in Kilts.

The big band of the Second infantry, playing "Yankee Doodle," led the way for the tremendous column representing the dry goods trade of the city. This column was broken by a corps of Scotch Highlanders in kilts, shrilling their bagpipes, by band after band, and still the solid line flowed by. Showing the effects of even the hasty drilling of the last two weeks, the men of the dry goods trade, each carrying his flag, swung by the reviewing stand in good military alignment. The mere number of them was tremendously impressive.

The Chicago band—one of the semipublic institutions of which the city is justly proud—led one of the big detachments. All the way through the dry goods division it was noticeable that the owners and managers of the big stores marched with their employés.

Mayor Thompson, the sun shining on his tall hat, stood to acknowledge the scattered cheers of the marchers by waving his flag. Each time the colors came by at the head of an organization, Maj. Gen. Barry and his staff came to a stiff and soldierly salute. One of the amusing features of this division was a big company of small office boys, who made up for their lack of military training by the vigor with which they waved their flags and raised their voices.

No Attempt to Advertise.

Not in the entire line was there the slightest thing to indicate any suspicion of advertising effect. These employers had closed their business houses and turned out to march with their people, moved only by a purely patriotic purpose.

By thousands and tens of thousands they flowed by for more than an hour, an army in itself.

Then, as the last of the dry goods men passed the stand, the First Infantry band ushered in the women of the same trade They came, too, in thousands, and Gen. Barry clapped his hands in answer to their cheers—women, young and as old as women ever get, all in white waists and dark skirts, each waving her flag as she passed. Such volleys of shrill feminine cheers never rent the air of Chicago.

As if to emphasize the military character of the appeal for which they marched, one of the companies of young girls, all in white, wore red helmets trimmed in blue and white.

The Second Division.

There was not an instant of delay in the approach of the second grand division. Headed by its officers and the splendid band of 100 pieces, the fine regiment of cadets of the Illinois State university swung up the avenue. Company after company, filling the whole wide street, they marched with all the fine rhythm and precision of regular soldiers. To watch the splendid bearing of these stalwart young fellows in their cadet gray and khaki uniforms was to get a new idea of the value of military training in the schools and colleges of the country.

Ambulance corps, motor ambulance, stretcher bearers brought up the rear of this fine command, of which the state may well be proud.

Society Women in Line.

Gray and bent, the old men of the drum and fife corps of U. S. Grant post, Grand Army of the Republic, led a column of several hundred women, many of them well known in society, under the command of Mrs. Samuel T. Chase.

The men and women of the Chicago Telephone company brought a new feature into the parade when the company's big glee club following its band sang the "Star Spangled Banner" as the first division passed the stand.

For Permanent Preparedness.

With a big band playing "America" at their head the men of the insurance profession, all in white hats, passed the stand at 11 o'clock. Trim and well dressed, they, too, showed the results of their drills during the evenings of the last two weeks, and were fit representatives of the peculiar kind of preparedness for which they stand.

The girls of the insurance offices had a gorgeous drum major in blue and gold with a white bearskin and a roaring band who ushered them in.

A column of messenger boys from the telegraph companies, all in uniform, was led by a band of their own size. Behind them was carried a flag fifty feet long, with a line of youngsters supporting it on either side.

Hot and Cold for It.

The coal and ice trades—opposite forms of preparedness—had a band which was "Marching Through Georgia" as it passed the stand. By way of adding savor to the occasion the salt trade followed.

Several hundred small boys from St. Mary's Training school, with regular khaki uniforms and puttees, marching in companies with rifles on their shoulders, brought cheers as they came by.

Railroad presidents and rate clerks marched side by side in the great "transportation" division, made up chiefly of members of the Traffic club with office boys from freight offices, women stenographers in white, and hundreds of office and shop employés, served to swell this division.

The board of trade delegation was big, noisy, and effective. Some of the companies had been splendidly drilled, and in their white hats and dark blue suits marched by almost like trained soldiers. They roared, "Big Bill!" saluted Gen. Barry, and led the way for the employés of the Chicago grain elevators.

The millinery and dry goods specialties lines had hundreds of men and women in line, many of them attractively uniformed.

Pottery Girls Add Color.

In the pottery and glass division many of the men wore high straw hats of red, white and blue, while the ranks of women were all in white with bright ribbons around their hats.

All around the reviewing stand the Boy Scouts were busy running errands, helping the police and military to keep the crowds in control and otherwise making themselves useful. Once or twice their stretcher bearers were called on to carry out to the ambulance a woman who had fainted in the crush.

At 2 o'clock came a hush. The column halted. Then suddenly all the bands within hearing broke into "America." On the reviewing stand the singing was started up, and up and down the avenue it went in surges. Then, as the last of the surface line employés passed, the men representing the machinery trades came swinging forward behind them.

Phone Girls Inspiring Sight.

Enormously spectacular and attractiv was the column of 3,000 telephone operators, led by the big band of the company Just before the drum major marched a rank of young women in white waists and blue skirts, wearing beautiful hats of white and red. Behind them, each group by itself, all in white and black uniforms with flag headdresses, marched the operators of the different exchanges.

It was as pretty a spectacle as could be imagined. Doubtless thousands of men who have grown cross at the hello girls because of a wrong number or some other trifling disappointment felt pangs of regret.

Several hundred girl operators from the long distance offices of the company were dressed in red, white, and blue costumes and marched so that they formed a living flag.

Some of the divisions had been so well drilled that their marching was warmly applauded all along the line.

Auto Trades Hundreds Strong.

Following these young women were the men of the Chicago automobile trade, hundreds strong, all wearing white hats and marching in good order.

During the middle of the afternoon Maj. Gen. Barry leaned over the front of the reviewing stand and lifted up a small boy who was vainly trying to see over the heads of the crowd. Thereafter the youngster had the great privilege of standing side by side with the major general of the army and saluting with his chief the colors as they went by.

Nearly 500 architects, including practically all the leading professions in the city, marched in one group with representatives of the heating and plumbing supplies trades immediately following.

Still the marching ranks grew closer till there was hardly two paces between them and the river of men and women swept by still more swiftly.

Enormous Crowd Orderly.

The crowd by this time was enormous. Wherever there was any extraordinary pressure a group of boy scouts with staves kept a frail barrier, and, miraculously there was never an attempt to break through. One has never seen crowds so orderly, so quiet, and yet so earnest in their determination to see all of an apparently endless parade.

Naturally the Art institute gave special applause to the division of nearly 200 artists who followed a pretty young woman holding aloft a palette as the emblem of their art.

Impressive in their numbers and in every other respect, were the stalwart men of the Building Constructors' association as was the great division of building material business interests which followed them.

Led by a band from Elgin, the men in the Jewelry division, marching by companies, made one of the handsomest showings in the parade. They wore blue suits and white hats, with a white sash over the shoulder.

As noon approached, the sky became overcast and heavy clouds threataened rain. Promptly the dispatcher at the headquarters of the parade committed hurried his work.

Carry Lunches to Grant Park.

Hundreds of people who had brought their lunches down town with them adjourned to Grant park to picnic on the grass. Vendors, with baskets of sandwiches and fruit, did a thriving trade.

Following the long line of the grocers came the produce trade employés—preparedness again—for these are the men whose job it is to keep the larders of 10,000,000 people constantly filled. No wonder they marched so proudly in behalf of that preparedness which involved every national as well as personal interest of the people!

The marching girls of the great mail order houses brought fresh sunshine with them as they came. They marched in open order, filling the whole wide avenue from curb to curb and put new spirit into the crowd, which had become a trifle weary after watching an endless column which had already been four hours in motion.

Material for Soldiers Here.

The men of the advertising and publishing group were different in their palm beach suits, white hats, and gloves. It was also apparent that they had been drilling. Gen. Barry, in looking them over, seemed to think he could find some good material for soldiers among them.

Hundreds of lawyers ushered in the division of the professions. In the ranks of the members of the bar marched several women, and the number was so large as to be a sufficient demonstration of the fact that the legal profession believes in preparedness.

Especially impressive was the splendid column representing the engineers. The whole front rank was made up by men in working costume carrying their various instruments over their shoulders.

As modern war is more and more a matter of engineering, so the members of the profession in America feel the responsibility of making ready for national defense more deeply than those in any other lines of work. Their demonstration was a splendid exhibition of voluntary patriotic service.

Four or five hundred members of THE TRIBUNE force led the way for a detachment of clergymen, several ranks, with the venerable Bishop Fallows in the van.

The column representing the public utilities was headed by 150 men of the gas company, singing, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," through their megaphones as they marched along.

The men of the elevated railroads were headed by their own splendid band of fifty pieces. Behind them came the officials of the surface lines with another big band and a large column of several thousand men. Most of the surface line employés wore continental cocked hats of paper, and many of them greeted the mayor with hilarious cheers of "What is the matter with Big Bill," in memory, doubtless, of not remote arbitration proceedings.

Zouave Band Leads Lumbermen.

A dashing zouave band led the way for the Lumbermen's association. Before its first company marched a rank of young women, and the men who followed numbered several hundred.

Young men and women by the hundreds marched behind the standard of the Men's Wear industries and each of them carried a flag. Some of the girls had learned war cries of their own, and shouted them shrilly as they passed the reviewing stand.

Next followed the hardware metal related lines, marching in almost perfect alignment.

The men of the iron and steel trades were another group, in which was displayed an amazing acquaintance with proper marching formation and order They all wore white straw hats and went swinging by the reviewing stand, sixteen abreast, in fine step. The young women of the same division, also in uniform hats and waists, had learned an effective drill.

The hardware interests were strongly represented and made an impressive showing.

Bankers in Nobby Array.

Next in line, escorted by the Aryan Grotto band, came the bankers, who appeared to splendid advantage in their straw hats with red, white, and blue bands, and their snappy movement.

Six or 800 men of the rubber goods trades, many of them in uniform of white trousers and blue coats, lent especial proof to the amazing fact that in two weeks' time, with the spirit behind it, people who knew nothing of military tactics, could at least learn to walk sixteen abreast in a reasonably straight line.

At the head of the sporting goods division was a forty foot flag carried horizontally by half as many young men. In this column the ranks were marching very close together. Behind the same banner followed hundreds of young women in alternate ranks of white and blue.

The Shriners' band of Medinah temple, in their oriental uniform, led the columus of real estate men. Their big flag stopped just in front of the reviewing stand.

Flags, and still more flags, always flags passing in endless wave; always the bands playing "Marching Through Georgia," "Yankee Doodle," and "America."

The columns of the paint, oil, and varnish trades was divided into squads by ranks of young women in white skirts, blue waists, and white hats.

Now the young men of the Chicago stock exchange marched by, with the investment bankers singing as they passed the reviewing stand.

Variety with Electrical Men.

The tremendous turnout representing the electrical industries was broken in half a dozen places by various attractive and striking features. At one place a tiny boy, dressed as Uncle Sam, and complete even to the long gray whiskers, marched proudly by himself in front of ter rows of stalwart men, each carrying the flag over his shoulder.

The young women of the electrical industries were headed by a rank of especial attraction, each of them in the costume of the Daughters of Liberty, while farther back several ranks of young men wore high red helmets from which depended plumes of blue feathers.

As the afternoon grew on the spectators looking at the parade from the windows of skyscrapers along Michigan avenue grew constantly more reckless. In a hundred windows on the Michigan avenue front of the Peoples Gas building people were sitting far out on the window ledge with nothing but air between them and the pavement, sometimes a hundred feet below.

Elgin Cadets Make Hit.

All down the avenue the hit was made by the band of the Elgin High school, followed by the first company of cadets from that institution. The Elgin High school is one of the first in the state to adopt military training as a part of its regular curriculum.

Then, in long ranks, marched the members of the National Security and Navy leagues. Each man wore a "preparedness" placard on his hat.

Yachtsmen in Uniform.

The Chicago Yachtsmen, several hundred strong, in uniforms of white duck and blue, greeted their fellow sailors in the air with a roar of cheers. The last rank carried the sailing pennons of all clubs represented in the Chicago district.

Now the bands came close together and the noise was redoubled. One band all in white led several hundred members of the Hamilton club.

Right behind, the First Infantry band cleared the way for the big delegation of the Illinois Athletic club, each of whom wore a white yachting cap, a white sash, and white gloves. They were commanded by several officers on horseback.

The feature of the Chicago Athletic club demonstration was a big flag borne horizontally in the midst of its marching column.

German Club Attracts Attention.

No organization in the parade attracted more attention nor showed a more stalwart lot of men in its ranks than the German club of Chicago. Every man in line wore the national colors on his hat band and carried the flag over his shoulder.

The Lamda Sigma Phi society led the way for what was one of the most impressive features of the afternoon's demonstration. It was more than moving to see the old and varying uniforms of the former regulars of the United States army and navy. A navy bugler blew the calls. Soldier, sailor, and marine, side by side, kept step and Gen. Barry was quick to give them the honor of a salute.

And then the stockyards. Men and women, the girls waving tri-colored parasols and the men with their flags; an army of them.

All Live Ones.

Whatever happens to the live stock which is unloaded at the yards, no one has ever suspected the people who work there of being "dead ones." They demonstrated again the eager and joyful quality of their spirit. Every flag in the long ranks was constantly in motion and every man they knew was saluted with an enthusiasm that left nothing to the imagination. Among this division marched a merry and enthusiastic bevy of young girls dressed in middy blouses and each bearing a flag parasol.

Suburbs Represented.

Just before 5 o'clock the fine divisions from the suburban communities began to come by. First among them was the Melrose Park division, followed by Harvey and Chicago Heights. Then came the picturesque marchers from Englewood with purple banners and headdresses, and half a dozen ranks of young girls in white waving their flags and eliciting from Maj. Gen. Barry a hearty handicap.

The Woodlawn Business Men's association brought up the rear of the suburban section, and behind it—with dinner time just ahead—tramped the representatives of the shoe and leather trade.

And still the patience and patriotism of the people is unexhausted. As it neared 6 o'clock several hundred public accountants and appraisers marched by, and behind them a big division of men representing the office appliances industry.

Following came the furniture manufacturers in a small detachment. The printers, led by a juvenile fife and drum corps, turned out in large numbers. The leather bag manufacturers and leather belting manufacturers made up a small contingent that followed the printers.

A local military organization made up of boys, called the White City Guards, presented a fine military appareance.

Polish Bodies in Line.

Next came the Polish Women's alliance, the members of which were dressed in white and wore straw hats trimmed with red. Then came the Polish Societies of Chicago, led by a boys' band and four columns of youngsters dressed in khaki, carrying rifles. Directly behind the boys marched several columns of men and women in quaint costumes consisting of red jackets and felt hats. Then came the Polish Business Men's association, whose members made a fine apearance in silk hats and long frock coats. The United Polish societies brought up the rear. Taken all in all, the Polish organizations made an impressive appearance and constituted one of the largest contingents in the parade. A banner carried by one of the members bore the inscription: "Born in Poland. Ready to fight and die for U. S. freedom."

The South Chicago Marching club appeared well in brown uniform caps and well formed lines.

A small contingent of the Chicago League of Gun Clubs followed, and then came the Armenian-American Citizen league.

The Croatian societies appeared to advantage as they marched by, being led by four little girls dressed in blue and carrying imitation swords.

Marching far in the rear, and led by a zouave band, came a uniformed column of little girls and young women escorting the Sons of Veterans, displaying a fine military bearing and evoking much applause from the spectators.

Before 6 o'clock the number passing the reviewing stand had already exceeded the total recorded in New York. For an hour later there was a lapse in the line. Then the people who really mean preparedness came on.

CHICAGO TO WILSON

President and Congress Called Upon to Observe Demand for Adequate Preparedness

SIX FOOTERS

Fifty of Them Shoulder to Shoulder.

Before the county building contingent of 1,000 marched fifty picked men from the county recorder's office, led by James C. Russell, chief clerk of the office, who represented County Recorder Joseph F. Connery.

The fifty would have made glad the heart of Frederick the Great's father. Each of them was over six feet in stature. They were accorded the place of honor in the county building section, marching before Sheriff John E. Traeger, marshal of the section, and before the members of the county board.

LABOR IN LINE

Building Trades Council's Legions Have Prominent Place.

Organized labor constituted one of the large units of the parade. Led by Simon O'Donnell, president, the Chicago Building Trades council turned out in force. The turnout of organized craftsmen attracted universal attention.

Efforts had been made by the Chicago Federation of Labor, despite Samuel Gompers' open advocacy of preparedness, to keep organized labor here from participating in the celebration, but the efforts of the central body were not entirely successful.

Like Mr. Gompers, president of the National Federation of Labor, many of the union men were for preparedness. Thousands of union men marched as individuals to express their convictions.

"We are not in sympathy with the parade," said E. M. Nockels, secretary of the Chicago federation, yesterday, "because the men at the head of it are all enemies of organized labor."

GERMANS MARCH

Nine Hundred Members of Club Sing Patriotic Songs on Whole Route.

Nine hundred members of the German Club of Chicago, singing patriotic airs as they mached, drew applause all along the line. Their nifty straw hats, with red, white, and blue bands, and the streamers of the same colors suspended from their coat lapels, presented a patriotic front.

It was the only German club or society registered, but it was agreed that thousands of other German-Americans were in line. It was said that it was only by accident that the North Side Turngemeinde had not marched, and that other German societies might have participated had it not been for restrictions in by-laws prohibiting official participation in such affairs.

German Americans interviewed yesterday were incensed at the inference of lack of interest drawn from the fact that but one German organization officially participated. The members of other organizations paraded as individuals.

COMES TO URGE BIG NAVY PLANK IN G. O. P. PLATFORM.

Col. R. M. Thompson Leaves Washington to Labor with Republican Resolutions Makers.

Washington, D. C., June 3.—[Special.]—Col. Robert M. Thompson, as chairman of a special committee of the Navy league, has left for Chicago to make a plea before the committee on resolutions of the convention for a naval preparedness plank in the Republican platform. After the Chicago convention he will go to St. Louis.

The committee includes Henry Breckinridge, former assistant secretary of war, and two Navy league members who are candidates for president.

CHICAGO PARADE BEATS 'EM ALL, CHAUNCEY DEPEW SAYS

Former Senator Arrives for Convention and the Politicians Yell at Him by His First Name.

"The preparedness parade excels anything of the kind we ever witnessed—it promises to be a world beater."

This was the sentiment expressed by former Senator Chauncey M. Depew and former Gov. Franklin Murphy of New Jersey, who arrived in Chicago yesterday. They are at the Congress hotel.

They arrived while the parade was in progress, and twice during their trip from the La Salle railroad station to the hotel they were obliged to break through the line of spectators and marchers.

"The thing that pleased me above all," said Mr. Depew, "was my recognition by so many in the great preparedness throngs. Time and again I had to turn around and tip my hat to people calling out, 'Hello, Chauncey!' That shows I'm not entirely forgotten."

Mr. Murphy also complimented the demonstration.

Hotel lobbies, political headquarters, and other places of convention activities were deserted during the morning, politics being forgotten and sidetracked for the parade.

No delegations to the convention arrived up until noon. The advance guard will get in today, according to present schedules.

PREPAREDNESS CAPTURES THE ENTIRE CITY HALL.

Building Not Officially Closed, but Little Business Is Done and Offices Are Deserted.

The spirit of preparedness captured the city hall. The hall was not officially closed, but it might as well have been. Only those employés who would not or could not march or who "stayed to keep the department open to the public" were at their posts and they were few.

In only two departments, except police, fire, and electricity, was there any show of activity. These were the board of election commissioners, where preparations were going ahead for Monday's judicial election, and the office of the city treasurer, where, under the state law, the hours of work must keep step with those of Chicago banks.

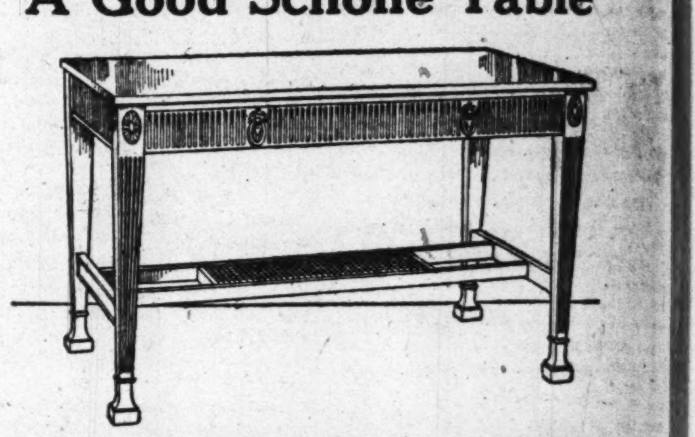
A Good Scholle Table



Adam Style; solid mahogany; size 26 by 50 inches; cane panel in the shelf. Now priced at $31

A FEW months ago, during our Semi-Annual sale, we sold these tables at $29. It was a very low price and those who bought them certainly got a bargain.

We're lucky to be able to get more of these tables at any price; and, considering the great advance in the cost of materials, you're lucky to be able to get such a table now at $31. With all the increased cost, the price is only $2 above our special sale price. It's at least $15 below normal market value.

It's just one of our ways of giving our customers a special bit of excellence, at an advantageous figure.

ONLY SIXTY-EIGHT OUT OF MORE THAN A MILLION NEED MEDICAL ATTENTION

YEOMAN SERVICE BY THE RED CROSS AND BOY SCOUTS

Hospital Corps, Society Women, Doctors, and Nurses Care for Sufferers.

Yeoman service was performed by the Red Cross in connection with the parade, despite the fact that serious accidents were few and not a single fatality was reported during the day.

Assisted by Boy Scouts, members of the field hospital corps of the Illinois national guard, a number of society women, who acted as aids, and a brigade of fifty automobiles and ambulances loaned for the occasion, a staff of more than 100 nurses and physicians cared for scores of persons in the twenty-one emergency hospitals established along the route of march.

Few Marchers Need Aid.

For the most part the cases treated were of bystanders who became affected by the heat and general excitement while watching the paraders go by. Few marchers applied for treatment. Owing to the balmy weather, no cases of sunstroke were reported.

A large number of cases of "cinder in eye" were treated. The prevalence of this complaint was a commentary on the continuing smoke nuisance afflicting Chicago, especially from such institutions as the Illinois Central. No tributes were paid by the nurses to the city hall smoke bureau.

The most serious cases treated were those of a woman who was found to be suffering from appendicitis, a man who was struck by a piece of cornice which fell from a Jackson boulevard building, another man who was mistaken for a bale of hay by a horse, which bit him on the arm, and a third man who had a fit on the Van Buren street viaduct and fell over the railing to the Illinois Central tracks thirty feet below. All these cases were transferred to permanent hospitals.

Wear Red Cross Costumes.

All the society women who assisted wore the costumes of Red Cross nurses. They acted under the supervision of the chief nurses, who in turn were under the direction of the physicians in charge of each station. Mrs. Philip Schuyler Doane organized the first aids, and the executive committee, of which she was chairman, had for its members Mrs. A. A. Small, Mrs. R. W. Cox, Mrs. Robert R. McCormick, and Miss Clara Cuhady. In addition to those named, the members of the committee on locations were Mrs. Edwin W. Ryerson, Mrs. Charles W. Dempster, Mrs. William P. Nelson, Mrs. William H. Hubbard, Mrs. J. Gordon Wilson, and Mrs. Robert Hotz, who was the heroine of the Twentieth Century limited wreck several weeks ago. Each was a chairman of aids at one of the stations.

Among other society women who spent the day in bandaging bruises and administering liniment and pills were Mrs. Edward I. Cudahy, Mrs. Keene Addington, Mrs. Robert Thorne, Mrs. Frederick Childs, Mrs. Charles Dewey, Miss Louise Herrick, Miss Mary Newberry, Miss Virginia Pope, Miss Lolita Armour, Miss Ermina Carry, Mrs. R. H. McCormick Jr., Mrs. John Borden, and Mrs. Robert Gardner.

The total number of cases treated, and so far as known all minor cases, was 68.

Far Below Expected.

"I am glad to say that the number of cases treated in the emergency hospitals was far below that I expected," said John J. O'Connor, head of the Red Cross in Chicago, at night. "I attribute this result to the temperate weather and the very efficient manner in which the crowds were handled. That the cases were so few, in view of the hundreds of thousands of persons who were in the loop district, is, indeed, remarkable.

"Through the columns of THE TRIBUNE I desire to express a public appreciation of the very able assistance given the Red Cross by those who volunteered in its service."

PARADE BEATS NEW YORK'S.

Capt. Coffin, Who Saw Gotham Rally, Says Sentiment and Numbers Are Superior.

"This parade beats New York's both as to numbers and as to sentiment," said Capt. Percy B. Coffin, president of the city civil service commission, who has had a part in nearly every Chicago parade in the last twenty years, and who witnessed the New York demonstration.

"The sentiment in Chicago is better than it was in New York," he said, "because there were active demonstrations on the part of labor unions in New York against the parade.

"It is the greatest parade in the history of Chicago and there has been only one parade in Chicago which may be compared with it—the McKinley parade of 1896, when the marching lasted all day."

WED TO PREPARE TUNES.

Miss Lyle Comstock Becomes Bride of C. S. Prescott of Menominee, Mich.

A "preparedness" wedding yesterday was that of Miss Lyle Comstock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Comstock of 6406 Ingleside avenue, and Curry Stimson Prescott of Menominee, Mich., which was celebrated at the Blackstone hotel. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Judson Titsworth of Milwaukee, and witnessed by a large number of Chicago and out of town relatives and friends.

The bride was attended by Mrs. Frederic Owen Reemer of Michigan City, Ind., formerly of Chicago, and the bridegroom by Anson Eldred of Milwaukee.

PRINCIPALS WALK IN PARADE

Regular Meeting with Superintendent Postponed to Allow March.

High school principals did not meet with the superintendent of schools yesterday. The meeting was postponed until next Saturday to permit the principals to march in the preparedness day parade. The meeting of the board of directors of the Chicago Principals' club which was scheduled for next Saturday will be postponed to the following Saturday.

MAYOR'S WIFE REVIEWS MARCHERS BESIDE HIM.

Most Wonderful Exhibition in History, Mrs. Thompson Calls Parade After Watching It 10 Hours

Mrs. William Hale Thompson put in a ten hour day yesterday reviewing the marchers with Mayor Thompson from the Art institute stand. For six hours, until the sun sank behind the tops of the buildings across the boulevard, her only protection from the glare was her straw hat. The wind and the sun didn't make any difference yesterday.

"The most wonderful patriotic exhibition ever given!" she said. "What else could a person say? It is thrilling to see these men and women trooping past, thousand after thousand. It has been going on since 9 o'clock.

"This parade shows what stuff there is in the women of Chicago. They would be the first to help. The women are as much interested as the men."

Mayor Thompson took up his stand at 9 o'clock in the morning. He was still there at 6 in the afternoon.

"If congress could only see this!" he said.

PARADER ROWS WITH WIFE WHEN HE GETS BACK HOME.

And She Marches Him Right to Police Station, Where Sergeant Gives Them Advice.

K. E. Hansen marched in the preparedness parade and went home feeling pretty cocky. He hardly had a foot in the house before the row with his wife started. She took him to the Chicago avenue station.

"I marched in the parade and then took a couple of drinks," Hansen explained to Sergt. George Chatt.

"It seems he can't let drink alone," said Mrs. Hansen. "He doesn't want to support me and the children."

"I've supported you for nine years," said Hansen.

"Is that all? Seems a lifetime to me," said Mrs. Hansen.

"That'll do," said Srgt. Chatt. "You two go home and see if you can't prepare to live together happily in future."

Mr. and Mrs. Hansen left the station together.

Saves Children; Breaks Leg.

Frank Belacek of 1917 South Peoria street, a laborer, in order to avoid striking some children playing in the street, drove his motorcycle into the curbing at Maxwell and South Peoria streets yesterday and broke his right leg.

PARADE CROWD CUT BY GLASS WHEN WINDOW GIVES WAY

Several men and women were cut by flying glass and considerable excitement occurred shortly before 10 o'clock yesterday morning when a large window in an office of Frederick H. Bartlett & Co., on the third floor at 69 West Washington street, was broken. The broken glass showered over spectators and a number left with bleeding hands and faces.

The window was in the office of F. K. Reilly. Guests had crowded at the window for a view of the parade, when some of them are said to have leaned against the window, causing it to give way.

A division of the parade was passing at the time and the sidewalk was jammed.

DR. JOHN H. OAKES VANISHED

Dr. John H. Oakes disappeared on April 20. He was an osteopathic doctor at 32 North State street, coming from Johnson, Vt. His only relative is an aunt, Miss Anna L. Oakes of Vermont. He lived at 12 West Chestnut street. According to Dr. J. W. Wigelsworth, the doctor was very despondent over money affairs.

"IF YOU PARADED YESTERDAY ENLIST IN GUARD"—DUNNE.

Governor Says Now Is Time for Those Who Urge Preparedness to Show Real Patriotism.

Springfield, Ill., June 3.—Men fit for military service who marched in the preparedness parade today but do not enlist in the national guard are flying false colors, in the opinion of Gov. Edward F. Dunne. The governor issued a statement today calling on the young men of the state to enlist. He was one of the marchers for preparedness in the Springfield demonstration.

"Thousands will march in preparedness parades to place themselves on record for the sacrifices necessary to maintain an adequate trained fighting force," the governor said.

"To every marcher I have this message: The time for your sacrifice has come. You have announced yourself ready for it, and the nation and state expect you to make it.

"When the parade is over do not think you have done your part toward preparedness. You have only expressed your willingness to do it. So I would urge all preparedness marchers to go, when you break ranks, to the headquarters of a national guard regiment and enroll your names for enlistment."

CIVIL WAR RELICS FOUND IN FRONT OF JUNK SHOP.

Armor Plate Weighing Ton and Cannon, Stolen from Charles F. Gunther, Recovered by Police.

A sheet of armor plate weighing 2,000 pounds and an old cannon, seven feet long, relics of the civil war, that were stolen on Friday were recovered by the police last night in front of a junk shop at 1506 South State street.

The armor plate and cannon are the property of Charles F. Gunther, owner of the Gunther building at 1018 Wabash avenue, from the rear of which they were stolen. He is a civil war veteran and a collector of civil war relics.

"The armor plate was from the ship Cumberland," Mr. Gunther said. "The cannon was found at the bottom of the river at Charleston, N. C. I intended to put them on display for the preparedness paraders."

Mrs. Mary Scott, who lives across an alley from the Gunther building, saw eight men haul the relics away with a motor truck, she said.

Drug Clerks in Line.

The National Association of Drug Clerks, whose sixth annual convention is being held at the Hotel Sherman this week, caught the spirit of preparedness and postponed their executive session until Monday. More than six hundred of the clerks marched.

Responsible

Specialty Salesmen:

Attention!

A sales force of 150 men is being organized and at least 50 salesmen will be in the field by June 12th. We would prefer to have as many more by that date as possible.

This enterprise is not entirely new, but is a startling improvement upon past endeavors along similar lines. We are spending approximately $50,000.00 in the production end of this business for each $1,000.00 heretofore spent by competition. The result is a specialty which sells to practically every prospect as soon as he understands what it is.

The proposition will pay any salesman worthy of the name $100.00 a week from the start. It is possible for the right man, as he develops, to make more than twice this amount. It is simply up to the ability and industry of the salesman. The most territory any salesman can handle on this proposition is fifty or sixty towns. This includes towns of 1,000 population as well as the biggest cities, and every town in the territory must be handled. For instance, at least six men will be working in the state of Illinois, each of whom will have exclusive territory.

We prefer men who are living right in the territory they are working. Then they can travel five days a week and be home every Saturday and Sunday if they like, and part of the time they can be home every night.

We are the sole owners of the entire business and we will cover the entire United States.

This opportunity will particularly appeal to the salesman who is particular about the merit of the article he sells; to the salesman who is a big money maker at the specialty game, but who is tired of looking for a new proposition every few months and who is weary of the nerve racking, high speed and high tension salesmanship required to sell the usual specialty of uncertain merit—the specialty which the purchaser later on often wishes he had not bought.

It will especially appeal to the man who has unquestioned sales ability and industry, yet is only making two or three thousand dollars a year, and hesitates to make a change to the average specialty proposition, where only a small percentage of the men who attempt to sell such propositions succeed; it will appeal to such men because it has all the certainty of a salary every week. It will also appeal to the man who spends weeks or months in working up a proposition which may net him a nice commission or may fall flat and leave him broke, or at least disgusted and disheartened.

This proposition is a one-thousand per cent improvement over anything ever offered along the same lines and it is one of the greatest factors in commercial life as it exists today. This is not an insurance, "house-to-house," office-to-office, premium or trading stamp game, but in every town your prospects are invariably the best, biggest and most progressive business men. In fact, you have a list of prospects in each town, far more live than the usual leads secured through advertising.

The repeat orders are the most attractive part of this business. With the new business you will secure, your earnings should be 50% greater the second time you cover your territory, and should increase largely each additional time. Every order secured will pay you full remuneration every renewal, permanently, and it will be necessary to cover your entire territory every three months. You get full commission on all business whether it comes in through you or by mail.

We will only consider responsible, successful, thoroughly experienced salesmen. We are not looking for the man who "can sell anything" (usually down and out), or the man who is so clever he only has to work half of the time, or the man who never thinks one line is good enough, but must always have a side line. But we do want the type of man who can hold a good salaried position, who is willing to work for us in practically the same way and make a sure, steady, permanent income, which will net him two to four times as much.

The one requirement that we ask above all others of the man who replies to this advertisement is that he be able to recognize a good proposition when he has it presented to him properly. We don't want the salesman who is "Going to give it a whirl," or a try-out—but we do want the man who has initiative enough to know what he wants and to recognize the chance he has been waiting for when he meets it.

To the salesman residing outside of Chicago, who is interested in this proposition, we recommend that he come to Chicago and see us immediately, provided he has the requirements set forth above.

This proposition is soundly financed, and our salesmen will carry endorsements from national authorities and bank references of the highest character. The merit of this proposition, the enormous field, and the people behind it mean that it is sure to develop into one of the greatest selling propositions of the age. Every salesman knows what getting in on the ground floor with this kind of an organization means. It gives him every opportunity for advancement to the fullest extent of his capabilities.

We will be glad to answer wires or letters with regard to territory, but we will not promise to hold territory any longer than when the right man to handle it applies. We will pay no attention whatever to simple requests that we explain our proposition. Tell us fully about yourself and we will reply promptly with full information, if your application meets with our approval.

We have several salesmen already secured, but there is plenty of territory in each state still open. In most states there is no territory arranged for whatever.

Apply at once.

You won't be kept waiting for an interview.

Loop Million Cheers Marchers; Takes Demonstration Seriously

The untrafficked loop yesterday bulged with more than 1,000,000 Chicaogans, out to watch and cheer the city's greatest parade. They lined the sidewalks deep and solid, they choked the windows of every office building commanding the course of march, they balanced miraculously on chairs, stools, and boxes, a superlative crowd, brilliantly dressed, good humored, and exalted by the tremendous revelation of American spirit.

Fully half of the crowd were women and children, stoutly holding out against the siege of hunger and weariness, while mile after mile of marchers flowed past under the Stars and Stripes.

Walks Fairly Free.

Despite the packed condition of the streets walking from one point to another was comparatively free. For one thing, the music put ginger and snap in the sidewalk turnout as well as in the paraders, and restless souls managed to scramble over crossings during the brief halts in the marching divisions.

It was noticeable that moving picture houses, lunchrooms, and other business places which expected to pick up a sharp trade on the big outpouring did little business until after the last marcher had swung past to the muster out. A perfect day kept practically every soul in the loop out on the line of march until the parade trudged its eleven hour length. The highest temperature during the day was 75 degrees and the average was 65 degrees.

Good, Friendly Spirit.

A friendly, goodfellow spirit permeated the crowd with the warmth of a good cordial. One accepted a kick on the corns with a grimace, and the next pinned up the rent in a shirt waist with stoic aplomb.

There was but one thing members of the big crowd were unwilling to share on a fifty-fifty basis, and that was a front rank foothold on the curb. Thousands of eager faces searched the ranks of the marchers for friends. Greetings were always waved with a flag, and there was a total lack of that cynical jeering which usually makes sporadic appearances at the most popular parade.

It was Chicago's parade for all Chicago, and it was Chicago's voice in unison, going down to Washington in a call for a prepared nation.

COMMENT BY PROMINENT MEN

In the ranks of the thousands who marched for preparedness yesterday were some of the oldest and biggest men in Chicago, striding alongside with the youngest and humblest of the city's workers.

In the bankers' contingent, for example, walked James B. Forgan, gray haired for years now and retired from active business, but not too retired to march. He walked with his clerks of the First National bank, of which he is now chairman of the board, as did Frank O. Wetmore, his successor as president, and George B. Reynolds, head of the Continental and Commercial bank with his employés.

"It was a most wonderful and inspiring parade," said Mr. Forgan in the evening. "I am glad I marched."

Arthur Meeker called it "a wonderful experience—a thing that produced a sentiment that is bound to have its effect on congress." He walked in the Armour division from the stock yards, and Philip D. Armour, A. W. Armour, and Laurence Armour walked there, too.

In the dry goods division the spectators recognized John G. Shedd and James Simpson of Field's, Stanley Field, E. Mandel, F. S. Mandel, John T. Pirie, J. W. Scott, E. J. Lehman, and Edward Hillman.

"Feel Better"—Shedd.

"The parade was a tremendous expression in favor of preparedness," said Mr. Shedd. "I never witnessed such an outpouring, except when Gen. Grant returned from around the world. I marched, and I feel the better for it. Today's showing indicated how Chicago stands on the question of a better prepared nation."

Samuel Insull headed the Commonwealth-Edison contingent and B. E. Sunny that of the Chicago Telephone company. James A. Patten walked with the board of trade men and Ernest A. Hamill with the bankers. Roy O. West was there, and John S. Miller, with the lawyers. Ezra J. Warner Jr. marched, and A. A. Sprague II. and C. H. Canby.

"It was magnificent," said Bishop Samuel Fallows, who marshaled the ministers. "I have marched with the Grand Army in many parades in the last forty years, but in none like this. It was just the plain people of the middle west."

Judge Denis E. Sullivan, who walked with Supreme Justice Carter and the other judges, called it "the most magnificent thing of its kind I have ever seen. It will result," he added, "in awakening patriotic enthusiasms that have been long dormant."

"Spirit"—Mrs. Chatfield-Taylor.

Mrs. Hobart Chatfield-Taylor, who marched in Mrs. Samuel T. Chase's division of "patriotic women," said:

"It wasn't so much the size of the parade, although that was impressive, of course, as the spirit of it. All the women around me, Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Honoré Palmer, Mrs. Tuthill, and many others, seemed most earnest. Some of them were a trifle weary, but every one was glad she was there."

D. F. Kelly, manager of Mandel Brothers, said: "It was the most wonderful and impressive affair of its kind ever held. The feature that impressed me most was that it made the whole city kin, and the spectacle of millionaire and laborer marching side by side in the common cause of preparedness is one I shall not forget."

MONEY IS CUT, BUT GOOD.

Miss Hazel McCarthy of 918 East Fifty-fifth street lost her pocketbook the other day. She advertised for the purse and the $10 bill and keys it contained. It was returned to her, but the finder had picked it up from a street car track where it had been run over and smashed and torn by a car wheel. The government is expected, however, to redeem the bill.

Drops Dead in Parade.

Cairo, Ill., June 3.—Max Coffman, 50 years old, a wholesale merchant, dropped dead while marching in a preparedness parade here today.

DO YOU KNOW
The Two Finest Player Pianos?

Do you know the names of the two Player Pianos that are absolute standards of value? Here they are.

APOLLO

DIRECTS MARCH WITHOUT SEEING A SINGLE LINK

Capt. Sheldon, at Phone and Map Board, Calls Parade "His Verdun."

BY WALTER NOBLE BURNS.

From an office in the Monadnock building the parade was directed by a man who did not have a glimpse of it from first to last.

Capt. Raymond Sheldon, U. S. A., was the unseen power that set the procession going, wheeled its units into line, determined its pace, and arranged every detail.

That there was not a hitch to mar the day's program was due to this young army officer's genius for working out the minutiæ of such a stupendous project and his generalship in handling large bodies of men.

On the walls of Capt. Sheldon's office hung three immense maps of Chicago. Strips of colored cardboard, held in place by pins with heads of the same color, represented divisions of the procession. An inch of cardboard meant 1,000 men. Red, black, and green strips grouped in Grant park indicated that 70,000 men were waiting in the morning for the boom of the cannon that was to set them moving. A long line of pink in Wabash avenue stood for 10,000 girls ready to join in the procession.

Capt. W. Y. Hendron of the First infantry, I. N. G., acted as Capt. Sheldon's aid de camp at headquarters. Four young men were busy at telephones from morning till night.

Wait Starting Orders.

Commanders of corps and divisions waited in other offices along the line of march to receive Capt. Sheldon's orders. The three main stations were in Grant park, at Van Buren and Michigan avenue, and La Salle and Van Buren. There were fifteen substations.

All day Capt. Sheldon watched his maps. As fast as the organizations moved into the parade he would unpin the cardboard that represented them and throw them on the floor. The first map was cleared by noon, the second by dark. As a telephone message came at night that the last body of marchers had fallen into line, the captain plucked a strip of red from the third map and dropped it on the floor. For him it was the end of the parade.

How He Fired Orders.

Hour after hour, Capt. Sheldon chewed a cigar and fired orders out over the telephones. In keeping four telephones humming, he rivaled Napoleon's feat of dictating to four secretaries at once.

Telephone—Board of trade not ready.

Capt. Sheldon—Telephone No. 6 and tell 'em to throw the board of trade in after millinery.

Telephone—Hides and leather, passing No. 16.

Capt. S.—Slow 'em down.

Telephone—No. 16 says they are marching slow.

Capt. S.—Tell 'em to march slower. The parade has been making seventy-six yards a minute. I want it to move sixty yards a minute. That's the schedule.

Slow Them Down.

Telephone—Twelve reports the parade passing at the rate of forty-five ranks a minute.

Capt. S.—Make it thirty ranks.

Telephone—Rubber wants to know if it can't march this morning.

Capt. S.—Rubber doesn't get into this parade until night. That settles that.

So it went all day long. At noon a lunch was brought in for the captain and at night a dinner. But over his beefsteak he still issued orders.

Ward Ray Howard a Host.

Ward Ray Howard of Louisville, Ky., who is in Chicago to visit the Republican convention, gave a dinner party last night at the South Shore Country club, where he is temporarily residing. Guests included Mrs. Charles D. Hilles, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Osborn, Mrs. James Reynolds, Miss Juliet Howard of Lebanon, Ky., Mrs. Thomas Caliger, Thomas Winn, Count Montelass of Munich, Germany, and P. W. Rader.

FOR YOUR SORE FEET

What to Do to Relieve the Aching—Some Tips to Marchers by Dr. Evans.

BY DR. W. A. EVANS.

[Health Editor of The Tribune.]

Your feet and legs are sore today. Yesterday you marched three miles on a hard pavement. Possibly, all in all, you walked five miles. You had on thin soled shoes and you were unaccustomed to so much walking. Today you are uncomfortable in the feet and legs, and being uncomfortable you are grouchy.

What can you do to get rid of the hurt, for you would like to get out of doors today because you are not good company?

Take a hot foot bath. If you can sit or lie with the hot water up to your knees so much the better. Massage or rub the calves of your legs and your feet gently but firmly. Do it thoroughly.

Next sponge your feet with weak alcohol or carbolic acid one part, water ten parts and alcohol thirty parts. Dry well. Dust with boric acid and starch, half and half, or with talcum powder. Put on clean, well fitting socks or stockings.

If your feet are blistered it will be better to avoid the general hot foot bath. Clean thoroughly with soap and water and apply the carbolic acid-alcohol lotion to the blister. Dry and dust with boric acid. Rub the calves of the legs well.

You walked yesterday for one kind of preparedness. Why not walk every day for another kind of preparedness? It does not hurt after the first day.

CITIES OF NATION TURN OUT HOSTS ON 'PREPARE' DAY.

Fifty Thousand March at St. Louis—Parades at Many Other Points.

St. Louis, Mo., June 3.—St. Louis answered the call for national preparedness this afternoon with a parade in which 50,000 persons marched.

More than a quarter million persons lined the streets, cheered, and waved flags as the marchers, representing all walks of life, passed. Three hundred women took part in the pageant.

The parade started in the downtown section at 2 o'clock, and it was after 6 o'clock when the last division passed the reviewing stand.

50,000 March at New Orleans.

New Orleans, La., June 3.—With fifty-two bands playing martial airs and many drum and bugle corps keeping the marchers in step, 50,000 citizens of the Crescent city this afternoon passed in review before Gov. Pleasant in a preparedness pageant.

Miss Lucille Ellis, queen of the last Mardi Gras, marshaled a division of 5,000 women.

Big Parade at Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn., June 3.—Headed by several regiments of Tennessee National guardsmen, 35,000 Memphisans today paraded as a plea for national preparedness. Memphis declared a holiday and practically all local industries were represented.

10,000 in Cairo Line.

Cairo, Ill., June 3.—[Special.]—More than 10,000 Cairoites today turned out to express sentiment for national defense in a great preparedness parade.

De Kalb Turns Out 5,000.

De Kalb, Ill., June 3.—[Special.]—Five thousand citizens of this city marched in the patriotic parade here this afternoon. Seven thousand people were on the side lines.

Many March at Springfield.

Springfield, Ill., June 3.—Twelve thousand persons, 3,000 of whom were school children, marched in the preparedness parade today.

Ten Thousand at Salt Lake City.

Salt Lake City, Utah, June 3.—The "preparedness" parade today brought out a body of marchers estimated at more than 10,000. Business establishments closed their doors during the parade. The route covered about two miles.

For Preparedness in Ohio.

Springfield, O., June 3.—City and county officials led a preparedness parade in which 5,000 persons participated here today.

Another Ohio Town Marches.

Providence Turns Out 50,000.

Providence, R. I., June 3.—Rhode Island men and women, 52,522 strong, marched here today in a preparedness parade.

17,000 March at Hartford.

Hartford, Conn., June 3.—Men and women estimated in number at fully 17,000 marched here this afternoon in a preparedness parade.

TREASON?

Anyway Peace Sign Comes Down.

Displayed across the front of the Lake View building in Michigan avenue yesterday while thousands of preparedness advocates were marching past was a long white cloth sign. It read as follows:

TO THE MARCHERS: There are 100,000 of you. You are not the ONLY Patriots. Two million farmers, half a million mine workers, and organized labor throughout AMERICA are AGAINST what you are marching for. Are you SURE you're right?

That is, it was displayed until it caught the eye of a captain of the south park police. He called two of his patrolmen.

"Go up there and tear that sign down!" he said.

The men went up to the third floor and a few minutes later down came the sign.

And two men held responsible were booked on charges of disorderly conduct:

CAPT. HORACE WILD, formerly of the United States aviation corps, of 6656 University avenue.

EDWARD B. THOMAS, son of Prof. and Mrs. W. I. Thomas of the University of Chicago, living at 6133 Kimbark avenue.

"When we reached the offices of the National Woman's Peace party, on the fifth floor of the Lake View building, this morning we put the sign outside of our own windows," said Mrs. Thomas, who, with other officers and members of the peace party, expressed great indignation over the arrests and the destruction of the sign.

"My son had hardly finished tying up the sign when the two policemen came."

Long Distance Spectator.

Fourteen year old Edward Gould left his home at 2453 Seminary avenue early in the morning and took up his position in a window in the Board of Trade building on Jackson boulevard at 9. He was there when the parade started, and he was there when it finished. He did not leave his seat during the twelve hours that the procession was in progress.

PERJURY CHARGE IMPERILS ORPET JURY CANDIDATE

Lewis Merwin, by Willingness to Serve, Brings Inquiry by Detective.

The attorneys who are defending Will Orpet got a shock about a week ago in the Lake county court at Waukegan.

Lewis Merwin wanted to sit on the jury. Of a hundred men who file into the jury box to be examined for the jury, there aren't more than one or two willing to qualify. Lewis Merwin was more than willing. He was determined. And he had the attorneys for the defense astounded.

The state tendered Merwin to the defense, and Attorney Wilkerson went after him. There was something about the venireman that the defendant's counsel didn't fancy. The struggle to unseat the farmer from Gilmer is still remembered in the courtroom. Lewis knew the meaning of big words. There was no ousting of him that way. And he never had had an opinion or expressed an opinion.

Finally Attorney Wilkerson said, "The defense excuses Mr. Merwin," thus using up one of its valuable peremptory challenges.

Merwin Looks Aggrieved.

Merwin left, looking aggrieved. Attorney Wilkerson was upset about it. Peremptory challenges don't grow on every bush. But the defense had a hunch. Lewis Merwin was too good to be true. It was the opinion of the defense that there was something wrong. Accordingly, investigators were sent out and in two days they came back with an affidavit. The affidavit was signed by Mrs. Mary Merwin, Lewis' mother. It said Merwin had often expressed opinions to her on the Orpet trial and had often told her he thought Orpet was guilty. Yesterday Attorney Wilkerson and Attorney Potter handed the affidavit triumphantly to Judge Donnelly.

"We wish to have the peremptory challenge used on Merwin returned to us," said Mr. Potter. "And we challenge Mr. Merwin for cause."

"You will have to file perjury charges against Merwin," said the judge.

"We do," said Mr. Potter.

"In which case," said the judge, "you will have to bring Mrs. Mary Merwin into court and have her testify against her son. I will then consider the matter."

"All right, your honor," said Mr. Potter.

Sword Hangs Overhead.

So it looked bad for Lewis Merwin as the attorneys resumed the interrogation of the eleventh venire. What will happen to him depends on how hard pressed the defense becomes. If it needs another peremptory challenge the perjury charges probably will be made and the thing thrashed out in court.

"The joke of it is," said the bailiff, weary from rounding up new venires, "that the only man in Lake county who said he wanted to sit on the jury apparently lied about the case."

The deadlock struggle for the last man in the jury was resumed with renewed vigor.

'PERPETUAL PREPAREDNESS'

Insurance Men Organize Permanent Preparedness Committee.

The insurance men, who turned out some of the largest divisions in the parade, have formed a permanent organization, the Insurance Preparedness League of Illinois, with the motto "Preparedness Is National Insurance."

The league is organizing an insurance delegation for the military training camp at Indianapolis, and expects to have a hundred men at each of the three camps.

LANSING ASSAILS RADICAL CRITICS OF WAR POLICIES

Says U. S. Must Place Life Before Property, Yet Strive to Remain at Peace.

Watertown, N. Y., June 3.—Secretary of State Lansing before the Jefferson County Bar association here tonight scored critics of the administration's foreign policy, who would have it do more than has been done in the negotiations arising from the war, and replied to those who complain the United States has been more vigorous in its dealing with Germany than with Great Britain.

"The violation of the natural right of life is a much more serious offense against an individual and against his nation," Secretary Lansing said, "than the violation of the legal right of property. There is not and cannot be adequate recompense for the wrongful destruction of life, but property losses may be satisfied by the payment of indemnities.

"If one belligerent violates the right of life and another belligerent violates the right of property, can you doubt for a moment which ones gives this government the greatest concern, or which one will call for the more vigorous protest and the more earnest effort to prevent repetitions of the offense?"

Deplores Materialistic Influences.

That there was an influence in America and even in congress which put right of property and right of life on a par, Secretary Lansing declared, showed that "the great heart of the republic is threatened with fatty degeneration through those who have lost their patriotic vigor; that many Americans have become lovers of ease rather than lovers of national honor."

Mr. Lansing read his address, saying he felt compelled to do so that he might not be misunderstood. The principal part of his address follows:

"In a nutshell, the situation of our relations with Great Britain and Germany, the two powers with which we have had our principal controversies, is this:

"Germany, having developed the submarine as an offensive engine of destruction, asserts that she cannot, on account of the resulting conditions, conform to the established rules of naval warfare, and we should not, therefore, insist on strict compliance. Great Britain has no sympathy with the German point of view and demands that submarines observe the rules of visit and search without exception.

Belligerents Cannot Agree.

"On the other hand Great Britain declares that on account of the new conditions resulting from submarine activity and the use of mines and from the geographical position of Germany, she cannot conform to the established rules of blockade and contraband, and we should not, therefore, hold her to strict compliance with those rules. Germany insists, nevertheless, that Great Britain be made to follow the existing law.

"Now what is the United States to do in the circumstances? If we admit that the arguments advanced are sound—and I am sure no one will deny that they are more or less reasonable—and submit to changes in the rules of naval warfare, we will be without any standard of neutral rights. Would not the liberties of neutrals on the high seas be at the mercy of every belligerent? As it is under the old rules, neutrals suffer enough when a state of war exists. They should not be further restricted in the exercise of their rights.

U. S. Must Insist on Rights.

"The only alternative, therefore, is for this government to hold firmly to those neutral rights which international law has clearly defined and to insist vigorously on their observance by all belligerents. In not the slightest degree can the settled rules be modified unless all the parties consent to the modifications.

"If Germany find it difficult or impossible to conform submarine warfare to the international naval code, or if Great Britain finds it equally difficult to obey the rules of blockade and contraband, that is their misfortune. They certainly cannot expect neutral nations to submit without resistance to further invasions of their rights.

"This has been the position of the United States from the beginning of the war. It has twice sought to obtain mutual consent from the belligerents to certain changes in the rule, but in both cases it failed and the suggestions were withdrawn.

Fears Decay of Patriotism.

"A government which places life and property on an equality would be generally condemned, and justly condemned. Yet, I regret to say, there are some Americans who do not realize this difference. How many take this view it is impossible to say, but the number is large, judging by the letters and telegrams received in Washington. Indeed, it is held by some who sit in the halls of congress. These people openly complain that the government does not exert as much pressure to protect American property as it does to protect American lives.

"With the knowledge that a number of citizens prefer to have their material interests protected even to the extent of not insisting on our rights, the conduct of our foreign relations is made most difficult. It shows that we do not all think true, that the great heart of the republic is threatened with fatty denegeration through those who have lost their patriotic vigor, that many Americans have become lovers of ease rather than lovers of national honor.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE WAR

BY CAPT. HENRY J. REILLY.

GENERAL.

It has been brought out in the British house of commons the past week that larg British forces are being kept at home because of fear of invasion. Also, that the number of men enlisted in the army has never approached the figure commonly believed, and that the numbers available in Asia and Africa have been largely overestimated.

The last of the week reports arrived of a naval engagement in the North sea in which the British and Germans lost heavily.

ITALIAN FRONT.

The Austro-Hungarians have continued their successful advance. They have captured the towns of Arsiero and Asiago and the territory between which make up an important Italian position in the foothills above the valley of the Po. They are now well across the Italian border in the sector between the valley of the Adige and the Brenta.

FRENCH FRONT.

The beginning of the week, several French attacks on the German position at Dead Man's Hill failed. German attacks in the region of Dead Man's Hill-Cumieres led to the loss by the French of more than two miles of ground, including Caurette wood. Later, a German attack reached the Chattancourt station, but was driven back by a French counter attack. The indications are that the last French positions on Dead Man's Hill and their position on Hill 304 will soon have to be evacuated. East of the Meuse, the Germans made slight gains in Thiaumont wood, Caillette wood, and near Vaux.

RUSSIAN FRONT.

There has been nothing of importance along this front the past week. There has been a number of small local attacks, but without marked result.

THE BALKANS.

The beginning of the week the Bulgarians crossed the Greek border to the east of Saloniki, seized three Greek forts and advanced toward Kavala on the Aegian. This movement is said to have been with the consent of Greece and as a result of territorial compensation in Albania, promised by the central powers.

AFRICA.

British, French, and Belgian forces have successfully advanced into German East Africa, the last German colony.

ARMENIA.

There has been no news of importance from this theater of war the past week.

MESOPOTAMIA AND PERSIA.

There has been nothing reported the past week.

SUMMARY.

The feature of the past week has been the increase in the offensive of the central power in the Verdun region, in the Southern Tyrol and the advance of the Bulgarians to immediately in front of the allied position before Saloniki. The weakess of the entente allies is illustrated by their failure to stop these advances and by the failure of the British along the French front and the Russian along their European front to take the general offensive. Greece's yielding to Bulgaria can only mean that the Greek authorities know the allied force in Saloniki is not strong enough to protect them against the Bulgarians, even should the Greek army join. From the beginning the attitude of the Balkan powers has been primarily determined by the size of the forces which the belligerents could put in the Balkans.

SEA FIGHT MAY LEAD SENATE TO BACK BIG NAVY

Tillman to Urge More Capital Ships and Air Squadron; Expects Wilson Aid.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., June 3.—[Special.]—Stronger pressure than ever is being rallied to impress on the senate naval affairs committee the need of adding materially to the navy building bill as it passed the house yesterday. The advocates of a larger navy already have received great encouragement from Senator Tillman of South Carolina, chairman of the committee, who is one of the advocates of a navy second only to that of Great Britain—and in second position as soon as possible.

Senator Tillman made it known today that he wishes one or more battle cruisers and two dreadnaughts in addition to the ships provided in the house bill. It is likely he also will insist on a full flotilla of dirigible balloons of the largest type. These scouts, he said, had proved their immense value in the North sea fight.

Believe Airships Guided Germans.

Naval experts believe the battle was entered on by the German fleet only after Zeppelins had informed the German admiralty that the British main fleet was too far away to support the detachment which the Germans engaged in the Skagerak.

"It is obvious that the great dirigibles, with their much greater cruising radius, are better scouts than our aeroplanes," Senator Tillman said. "It is our duty to build accordingly."

This lesson he considers no less important than the apparent proof that the German battleships were pitted against British cruisers in the main and were able to rout the lighter armored ships, whereas the battleships escaped.

Senator Tillman today issued a call for the naval affairs committee to meet during the period when the senate itself is simply adjourning from time to time until the close of the conventions. He has ordered its members back by June 12, the day on which he will return from a week's stay in South Carolina.

Tillman Expects Wilson Support.

By this meeting time, Senator Tillman figures, the president and the navy department will have had time to assimilate the lesson of the Skaggerak battle, and will have determined whether the administration will join the big navy men in insisting that the larger navy program go into effect. Thus he hopes that the senate's changes will be ready for discussion a week later, when the senators return in force.

He hinted strongly that the administration will look with favor on the additions. This came after a morning spent at the navy department talking with officials and experts. He said, however, he did not wish to make any detailed recommendations for new ships, based on the Skaggerak fight, until the complete report of the battle is at hand.

Sea Battle Much Discussed.

There were many others discussing the battle, and there is a strong belief that it will aid enormously in getting the senate to favor more airships, more capital seaships, and perhaps additions to personnel.

2 BRITISH AND 3 GERMAN STEAMERS REPORTED SUNK.

Berlin Says Teuton Craft Were Destroyed in Swedish Waters Without Warning.

LONDON, June 3.—Lloyds reports the sinking of the British steamships Elmgrove and Golconda.

[The Elmgrove was owned in Glasgow. It was 310 feet long, 5,018 tons gross, and was built in 1892. The Golconda was of 5,874 tons gross.]

Three German Ships Sunk.

BERLIN, June 3.—[By Wireless to Sayville.]—"Swedish newspapers report that three German steamships have been torpedoed by a submarine, probably in Swedish waters, and that no warning was given," says the Overseas News agency. "Six men perished. Inasmuch as a British torpedo was found near Skelberviken the Swedish press considers it certain that the ships were torpedoed by a British submarine."

DANISH FISHERMEN SAY 2 ZEPPELINS WERE LOST.

Report They Saw Huge Aircraft Destroyed by Fire of the British Fleet.

ESBJERG, Denmark, June 2, via London, June 3.—Two Zeppelin dirigible balloons are reported by fishermen returning to port today to have been destroyed. On one airship all the members of the crew are said to have perished.

The Avis Lamvig states that fishermen yesterday saw a Zeppelin in flames as the result of gun fire and that the air vessel was destroyed forty miles off the Thyboroin canal. The fishermen say the entire crew perished.

The Ekstr-Dladt says fishermen arriving at Ringkjobing say they saw another Zeppelin destroyed some miles from these waters.

GERMANS CLOSE IN ON VERDUN IN FURIOUS BATTLE

Storm and Capture French Village of Damloup, 6 Miles from the Stronghold.

LONDON, June 3.—The crown prince's armies are closing in on Verdun from the northeast with a speed unprecedented since the first week of the attack on the fortress.

The German war office this afternoon announced that the Germans have stormed and captured the strongly fortified French village of Damloup, six miles from Verdun, taking 520 prisoners. The French have suffered heavy losses in unsuccessful attempts to press back the German lines menacing Fort Vaux.

The French war office, admitting the loss of a ditch position north of the fort, declared that the French were defending the interior positions of the fort with the greatest energy.

Furious Battle Rages.

The official dispatches indicate that a battle of the greatest fury is raging on the abrupt slopes of Fort Vaux, standing at the summit of a 300 foot hill.

West of the Meuse, where the crown prince delivered his mightiest blows early this week, no important infantry struggles have occurred in the last twenty-four hours.

Military critics, however, believe the attack will shift back to the northwestern front before many hours if the French continue to hold out at Fort Vaux.

The Germans report another successful raid against the British front, southeast of Ypres. It was announced that Württemberg regiments Friday noon stormed and captured the ridge southeast of Zillebeke and English positions lying behind the hill, capturing one slightly wounded British general, one colonel, thirteen other officers, and 518 men. The British suffered heavily, Berlin reported.

German War Report.

The German official report says:

In the Champagne, south of Ripont, one of our reconnoitering detachments brought in more than 200 French prisoners as the result of our small hostile incursion.

West of the Meuse the enemy's batteries and fortified positions were shelled with visible success.

East of the Meuse the French suffered a further reverse.

During the early hours this morning a strong attack against our recently won position southwest of Caillette wood was repulsed. Further east the French repeatedly attempted yesterday to penetrate by storm attacks our trenches southwest of Vaux. All failed with sanguinary losses for the enemy.

Take Village of Damloup.

On the eastern slopes of the Vaux heights we extensively shelled the fortified village of Damloup, and 520 unwounded soldiers, including ten officers, were made prisoner and several machine guns were captured.

We captured by storm on Friday the ridges of the heights southeast of Zillebeke, southeast of Ypres, and the English position beyond, taking prisoner one general, slightly wounded, one major, and thirteen other officers and 350 unwounded men. The number of prisoners taken was small, the enemy having suffered sanguinary losses.

British War Report.

The British official statement, issued at midnight, reads:

Fighting of a severe nature continued unceasingly southeast of Ypres, between Hooge and the Ypres-Menin railway. Following up their initial advantage obtained yesterday evening in penetrating our forward line in this neighborhood, the Germans pushed their attack during the night and succeeded in pushing through our defenses to a depth of 700 yards in the direction of Zillebeke.

The Canadian troops, however, who are holding this sector of the defenses, launched counter strokes at 7 o'clock this morning, which have succeeded in gradually driving the enemy from much of the ground he had gained. The Canadians behaved with the utmost gallantry, counter attacking successfully after a heavy and continued bombardment.

Gen. Mercer and Gen. Williams of the Third Canadian division, who were inspecting the front trenches yesterday during the bombardment, are missing.

Opposite the Lentrant of our line, near Fricourt, north of the River Somme, a small party of a regiment raided the German line last night, bringing back a few prisoners.

French War Report.

The official communication issued in Paris tonight by the war office reads:

On the right bank of the Meuse no infantry action was undertaken during the course of the day. The artillery action continued with great violence on the front extending from the Thiaumont farm to Vaux.

In the Fort Vaux region the situation was not modified; the enemy made no attempt to develop the advantage which he obtained last night.

On the left bank the bombardment continued against our second line. The day was calm on the rest of the front.

The situation from May 28 to June 3: On the left bank of the Meuse from May 28 to 30 the Germans progressed between Le Mort Homme and Cumieres and occupied the Caurette wood and trenches immediately west of the wood.

Maintain Hold on Hilll 304.

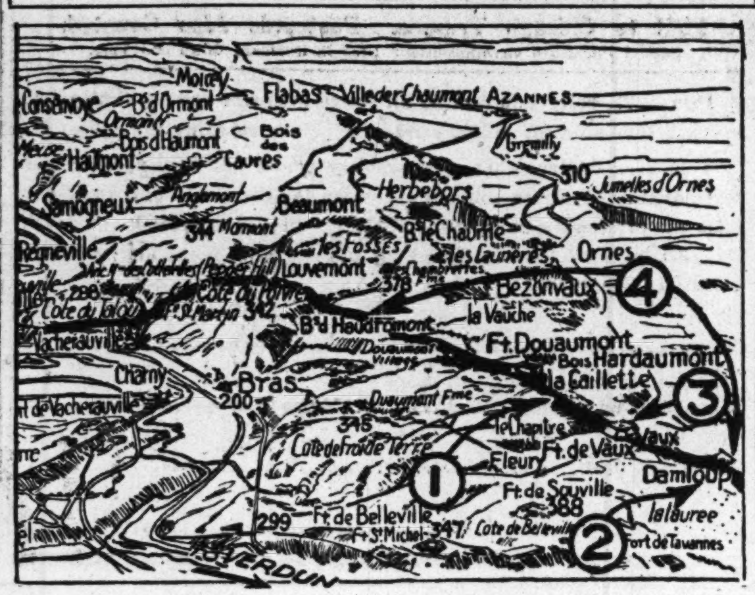
On the slopes north of Hill 304 we maintained our positions, as well as on the slopes southeast of Le Mort Homme.

On the right bank of the Meuse the enemy succeeded in gaining possession to the south of Fort Douaumont, of the greater part of the Caillette wood.

On June 2 attacks continued between the Vaux pond and the village of Damloup, having as their principal objective Fort Vaux. The enemy gained a footing in the village of Damloup.

On the night of June 2-3 the Germans succeeded in penetrating a ditch north of Fort Vaux.

Battle Lines at Verdun.



1—German attack northeast of Verdun forces French out of Caillette woods between Fort Douaumont and Fort Vaux.

2—Berlin reports advance of Germans to village of Damloup, capture French positions and 520 prisoners.

3—French war office admits loss of important positions north of Fort Vaux, which Paris claims the French are still holding against terrific German assaults.

4—Germans launch powerful new offensive east of Meuse from river to Damloup.

HEIGHTS IN THE CAUCASUS CAPTURED BY THE TURKS.

Russ Army in Center of Long Line Driven Back, Constantinople Officially Reports.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 3.—The war office today issued the following communication on the Caucasus situation:

The situation on the right wing is unchanged. In the center we occupied the village of Bashekevy and the heights lying north and east of this village, which is fifty kilometers southeast of Mamakhatun, and height 2,650, in the Narram mountains, sixteen kilometers northeast of Mamakhatun. On our left wing our reconnaissance parties repulsed strong hostile reconnaissances.

East of Samos our artillery sank a launch and seriously damaged a motor boat which it was towing.

Four days ago our aeroplanes successfully attacked a hostile camp near Rumani, in the region of the Suez canal, causing heavy damage to men and animals by bombs and machine

LONDON STUNNED BY NAVAL DEFEAT; REGAINING HOPE

Admiralty Report That British Fleet Held Battle Area Revives Confidence.

BY CURTIS BROWN.

[SPECIAL CABLE TO CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

LONDON, June 3.—Does Britannia still rule the waves? was the question that many perturbed Britishers asked themselves last night when the thrill of the newsboys' cries of the great naval engagement gave way to blank amazement over the first admiralty statement, showing seventeen British units lost and missing against a much smaller German loss..

Had the report given the reverse account, there would have been rejoicing, but no astonishment, for England was trained to the implicit belief in the invincibility of her great fleet.

Today, however, the gloom is lightened as another admiralty statement gives further German losses, but the most important of all is Admiral Jellicoe's report that the British battle fleet scoured the battle area until Thursday morning and failed to find the German squadrons.

Battle Fleet Still Intact.

The British battle fleet remains intact and it could not find a fight on the enemy's own waters. That is enough to cheer up the people and restore their confidence in the fleet, whereupon depends the salvation of the nation.

So today England feels that Britannia continues to reign afloat. Indeed, in some quarters it is held that the British superiority was proved rather than disproved, despite Wednesday's nasty knock, for, although the battle cruiser squadron got caught and suffered severely, when the British main fleet appeared the Germans departed.

To the superoptimists this was almost a victory. The newspapers of London and the provinces lay stress on the German disappearance, and at the admiralty it is stated definitely that the British could not find their antagonists. It is said there that only four British battleships were heavily engaged, and had the Germans remained to fight the main squadrons, which rapidly approached, a different story would be told.

No Effect on Future.

One of the high admiralty officials declared that the engagement, while resulting in the loss of important ships has not the slightest effect on the general naval situation, Great Britain retaining its numerical superiority in all types and classes, while the engagement does not show the Germans superior in gunnery or otherwise. England also has plenty of personnel to replace those lost.

On the streets and public places little change is noticeable. If anything, there is more animation than usual as the people hasten to buy the latest editions or halt to discuss the battle.

Last night, however, depression was noticeable in the theaters, where the crowds were subdued, and in the restaurants they were more silent than usual.

Fear Effect on Neutrals.

Those who look after the international politics are more concerned than those who conduct the fighting. They fear a decided loss to British prestige and influence abroad, particularly in the neutral countries, where the German agents will not fail to make the utmost of the events. What effect this challenge to the British naval superiority may have on the wavering neutrals—Roumania, for instance—is considered highly important.

Still more important is the internal effect in Germany. It has been believed that the German people have been growing steadily despondent, and upon this the allies have been banking much, believing that victory lay along the pathway of attrition.

Stimulated by this event, the German people now probably will be inspired to tolerate greater privations and greater sacrifices. From that angle the engagement is considered more important as affecting the ending of the war than the loss of ships.

Hope for Another Chance.

The British naval officers want the German fleet to come out again, but some express doubt that it will come because Germany may let this engagement suffice until the end of the war.

In England the whole personnel of one battleship often comes from the same port, so when a total loss occurs the community suffers severely. In several seaports today there were many sad scenes as distressed women and children were seeking information.

In a lesser degree these scenes occurred at the admiralty, where many women sought news.

England mourns the losses of personnel more than the ship losses. Most of these ships blew up rather than sank, which accounts for the heavy toll.

AUSTRIANS IN BALKANS ROUT FORCE OF ITALIANS.

Disperse Enemy Detachment Operating on Left Bank of Voyusa East of Avlona, Albania.

VIENNA, June 3.—The war office tonight gave out the following report on operations in the Balkan theater of war:

On the left bank of the middle Voyusa, east of Avlona (Albania), we dispersed an Italian detachment by a surprise attack. There were patrol engagements on the lower Voyusa.

Labor Case Adjourned.

Judge Scanlan adjourned court in the labor conspiracy trial with still only eight jurors accepted and sworn. The venire from which the lawyers were attempting to complete the panel was exhausted, and forced an early adjournment.

ITALIANS HALT AUSTRIAN DASH

All Attempts to Push On Checked, Rome Officially Reports.

FOE CLAIMS ADVANCE.

ROME, via London, June 3.—The following official statement on operations against the Austrians was issued from general headquarters today:

During yesterday an increasing offensive action by the enemy in the Trentino was stopped completely by our troops along the whole front of attack. In the Lagarina valley there was an artillery duel. The enemy fired on our positions from Coni Zugna, a height dominating Roverto, to Pasubio (Terragnolo sector). Our artillery replied and dispersed the enemy infantry on Zugna Torta.

Repulse Austrian Attack.

Along the line of the Posina torrent there was a violent bombardment on both sides, following which the enemy infantry delivered violent attacks in the direction of Posina height against the pass between Monte Giove and Monte Brazome. The attacks were everywhere repulsed, the enemy sustaining heavy losses.

Northeast of Monte Cengio, the Belmonte position, which several times was taken and lost yesterday, finally was won back by a brilliant attack.

In the Sugana valley the situation is unchanged. In Carnia and on the Isonzo front intermittent artillery actions occurred.

Enemy aircraft dropped bombs on Ala, Verona, Vicenza, and Schio. The damage was slight, six persons being injured in Verona.

Austrian War Report.

BERLIN, June 3, by wireless to Sayville.—The Austro-Hungarian advance into Italy in the southern Tyrol is continuing unchecked, according to yesterday's statement from the war office at Vienna. In the district of Arsiero the Austro-Hungarians have captured several more positions of strategic importance. The statement follows:

Our troops advanced east of the Mandrielle farm, fighting their way as far as Grenzeck.

In the district of Arsiero we captured Monte Barco, east of Monte Cengio. We obtained a firm footing at Fusine and Posina on the southern bank of the Posina rivulet.

GERMAN CHANCELLOR SENDS PRAISE TO FLEET CHIEF.

Lauds His Feat in Meeting and Defeating an Enemy Which Is Numerically Larger.

AMSTERDAM, via London, June 4.—The imperial German chancellor has sent the following telegram to the commander of the high seas fleet, according to a Berlin dispatch:

"I beg your excellency to accept my heartiest congratulations upon the grand success of the high seas fleet. Pride and enthusiasm prevail throughout the whole of Germany that the fleet has now also had an opportunity of showing numerically superior enemy, who considers himself invincible, with mighty blows what Germany's sea power is and can do. The fatherland rejoices and is thankful."

The commander of the fleet replied:

"I ask your excellency to accept the heartiest gratitude of the high seas fleet for your stimulating and congratulatory message. The pride of the fatherland, expressed in your excellency's words, gives us hope that we will be able to contribute in part to Germany's value in the world. This hope is of importance to our fleet, and an encouragement for the future."

LOSS OF SHIPS IN HUGE BATTLE GROWING LARGER

British Admit Two Destroyers Went Down—Germans Lost Huge Cruiser.

TELL OF BATTLE HORRORS.

From survivors come thrilling stories of the horrors and humanities of the battle. The British destroyer Shark acted as a decoy to bring the German ships into the engagement. It was battered to pieces by gunfire, and a half dozen sailors, picked up clinging to a buoy by a Danish ship, tell of its commander and two seamen serving its only remaining gun until the last minute, when the commander's leg was blown off.

A lifeboat with German survivors from the German cruiser Elbing rescued Surgeon Burton of the British destroyer Tipperary. He had sustained four wounds.

Two well known London clergymen, who had volunteered to serve as chaplains at the beginning of the war, Mr. Lyndell and Mr. Lepatourel, both of the Church of England, are among the missing. Mr. Lyndell is a nephew of Field Marshal Viscount French. He was to have been married in London on Monday.

RIVAL REPORTS CONTRADICT.

It is impossible to visualize any coherent story of the battle, which lasted many hours, with the different units at times fighting scattered engagement.

The British and German reports contradict each other flatly on the main fact. The British assert that the German fleet retired when the British battleships appeared, while the German official statement maintains that the German forces were in battle with the entire British fleet. . . .

The British assert they had only two divisions engaged, and that all the units of these were not able to participate in the fighting and, furthermore, that Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, commander of the grand fleet, remained in the area of the battle after the German had retreated and swept it thoroughly in search of enemy ships and survivors.

BEATTY IN THICK OF FIGHT.

Admiral Beatty, commanding the battleship squadron, presumably on his old flagship, the Lion, was again in the thick of the action. Every arm of the most modern naval warfare was employed—battleships, battle cruisers, torpedo boat destroyers, submarines, and even Zeppelins.

Whether most of the destruction was accomplished by gun fire or torpedoes is not yet known. British officers say that the battle was fought by the methods known and practiced by all navies. There were no surprises and no new devices of weapons or strategy.

How far the Zeppelins contributed to the German successes is a matter of dispute. Only one airship came within sight, according to the British accounts, and it was soon badly damaged and withdrew. But the Germans lay stress on the assistance given by their air service and neutrals report the presence of six Zeppelins in the North sea. The popular belief among the British public is that scouting Zeppelins kept the German fleet informed by wireless of the approach of their enemy and of his numbers and formation.

First Details of Fight.

The first official account in detail of the battle was given today by a high officia at the admiralty. It was noticeable that among admiralty officials the opinion was general that the depression caused by the first announcement of the result of the engagement was not justified. The Associated Press is informed that future details will have even a more heartening effect than the news given out today.

Expurgating only such portions of wireless reports as might be of assistance to Great Britain's enemies, the admiralty official gave the following details of the fight.

"We can only say we were looking for a fight when our fleet went out. Stories that the fleet was decoyed by the Germans are sheerest nonsense. In a word, with an inferior fleet we engaged the entire German high sea fleet, interrupted their plans, and drove them back into their harbors.

"In carrying out the plan decided upon we sustained heavy losses, which we expected, but we also attained the expected result of forcing the enemy to abandon his plan and seek refuge after we had given battle in his own waters near his coast.

"With the exception of two divisions, part of which was only partly engaged, the brunt of battle was borne by the battle cruiser fleet, and with one exception our battle fleet is ready for sea service. I must admit thta we had exceptionally hard luck with our battle cruisers, but the loss of three great ships does not in any measure cripple our control of the sea.

Four Phases to Battle.

"The great battle had four phases. The first opened at 3:15 p. m., when our battle cruisers, at a range of six miles, joined action with German battle cruisers. Shortly afterward the second phase began with the arrival on both sides of battleships, the German arriving first. But before their arrival our three battle cruisers had been blown up, supposedly the result of gunfire, although possibly they were victims of torpedoes.

"Such close range fighting with battle cruisers might be criticized as bad tactics, but our fleet, following the traditions of the navy, went out to engage the enemy, and on account of weather conditions could do so only at short range.

"The third phase was the engagement of battleships which never was more than partial. This phase included a running fight as the German dreadnaughts fled toward their bases. All the big ship fighting was over by 9:15 p. m.

Enemy Gone by Dawn.

"Then came one of the most weird features of the battle, as German destroyers made attack after attack, like infantry following artillery preparation, on our big ships. But these onslaughts were futile, not a single torpedo launched by them getting home.

"With the morning these attacks ended and the scene of battle was swept by Jellicoe's fleet. Not a single enemy vessel remained in sight.

"Until we get Admiral Jellicoe's complete report we can give only fragmentary incidents of the great battle. Among these is the torpedoing of the superdreadnaught Marlborough, which is now safely in harbor. It must have struck a veritable hornets' nest of submarines, as by skillful maneuvering it avoided three of these before it was finally hit.

"Early in the engagement, according to Admiral Beatty's report, a German battle cruiser, after being hotly engaged, blew up and broke in two.

"Officers of the fleet also reported passing a closely engaged German battle cruiser which was left behind while the British pursued the Germans. On their return this vessel was missing. Judging from its previous plight it must now be at the bottom of the sea. This accounts for two of the enemy's battle cruisers, and we have their admission that they had lost two battleships.

"The admiralty has a report of the sinking of four German light cruisers, and the Germans have acknowledged the loss of six destroyers. There is very good hope that the German loss is even greater, but we do not intend to make any estimates until we have complete official reports from our commanders, who do not report the loss of antagonists without definite evidence.

"Zeppelins did not play the important part attributed to them. Only one appeared. It remained in action a brief time, retiring under heavy fire, evidently badly damaged. Weather conditions were such that it is doubtful whether any aircraft would have been of much service.

"The enemy sprang no surprises. We saw nothing of any 17 inch guns. No tricks were used which were not already known in naval warfare.

"From the standpoint of actual strength the navy's loss in personnel, while great, was not serious, as we have plenty of men to replace them. But the deaths of so many gallant officers and men have caused profound grief.

"Admiral Hood went down with his flagship Invincible, in the words of Admiral Beatty's report, 'leading his division into action with the most inspiring courage.' His flag captain, Cay, went down with him. Capt. Sowerby, former British naval attaché at Washington, perished with his ship, the Indefatigable, while Capt. Prowse died on the Queen Mary.

Warspite Safe in Harbor.

An official statement issued tonight, referring to a German wireless to the embassy at Washington today containing the report of the speech of the president of the reichstag, notes that the loss of the battleship Warspite again is officially affirmed.

"This is untrue," the statement declares, "that ship having returned to harbor."

"The loss of the destroyer Alcaster," the statement continues, "also is announced. This is untrue, that vessel also having returned to its base.

"The names of three British destroyers not hitherto identified, making a total of eight lost, reported in an official statement issued early in the day, are the Nomad, Neston, and Shark."

List on Loss of Life.

PORTSMOUTH, June 3.—The commander of the port today posted the following list as the probable loss of life suffered by the British in the North sea fight:

Ship.	Complement.	Lost.	Saved.

German Ship Scuttled.

YMUIDEN, Holland, June 3.—The German cruiser Elbing was so badly damaged in the engagement with the British that it was scuttled by its commander, Capt. Madlung, according to reports brought here today. It was in collision with another German vessel.

LONDON EDITOR YEARNS FOR PEACE; U. S. AID ACCEPTABLE

Henry W. Massingham of Nation Says War Cannot Be Won Without Real Help from America.

LONDON, June 3.—A plea for American mediation on the ground that the entente allies can hardly win the war without American help is made in the current issue of the Nation by its editor, Henry W. Massingham.

"Were we ever a quick minded people?" he asks, "or do all nations lose political sense in time of war? Here is a great friendly country able to determine the issue that has us all by the throat. Against America we cannot win the war Without America (i. e., with coldly rigid neutral America) we can hardly win. With America we cannot help winning it.

"This power, having done us and humanity a substantial service at critical points of the conflict now, in the person of its president, offers to associate itself with an international settlement that Sir Edward Grey has defined as the thing he wishes to get out of the war.

"And we treat this advice as an unwarranted intrusion on our blissful enterprise, and the Times, which is certainly an organ of intelligence, with a proprietor who knows the United States, plumes itself on its politeness in refraining from saying all it thinks about it. How can this but confirm the impression that more than one important American has carried away from our shores—that we are the real obstacle to peace?

"I am sure that the government does not think in this fashion about the president's tender. I do not think that the British people (so far as it does any thinking at all) thinks so either. I do not suppose that the Times will be thinking so a few weeks or months later on. But this is how a critical event finds us out."

PRESIDENT SIGNS ARMY BILL

Washington, D. C., June 3.—President Wilson this afternoon signed the army bill providing for material increases in the land defenses.

The new law provides a standing army of 206,000 regulars and increases the strength of the militia to 424,000.

The regular army is "elastic" under the bill. At the discretion of the president it may be kept below its maximum strength during peace times and in time of war be increased to about 250,000.

LONDON DAILY NEWS CALLS FOR LORD FISHER'S RETURN.

Says Former First Lord of Admiralty Could Restore Confidence in National Defense.

LONDON, June 3.—The Daily News calls for the return of Lord Fisher, formerly first sea lord of the admiralty, to the head of the navy.

"No single event," says the newspaper, "would more effectively counteract the danger of a diminution of confidence in the navy, if it exists, than the return of Lord Fisher, who in time of peace brought the navy to a state of unexampled efficiency. The country needs him in this urgent hour."

The newspaper calls the North sea action the gravest disaster sustained by the British navy since the outbreak of the war. "Our losses were twice those of the enemy," it adds.

"The facts today are unwelcome," it concludes, "but they afford no grounds for pessimism or depression beyond the inevitable, unconcealed sorrow which the loss of 5,000 gallant lives must inspire. One consequence must attend the Jutland battle—that is the return of Lord Fisher to the admiralty."

INVESTIGATE PERU TROUBLE.

Washington, D. C., June 3.—Investigation of reported massacres of Americans and Englishmen by strikers at Talare, Peru, was ordered today by the state department. Reports of an outbreak were received by both the state and navy departments from American officials at Corinto, Nicaragua, and from Rear Admiral Winslow, commanding the Pacific fleet. American officials in Peru were at once directed to forward full details.

GERMAN SURVIVORS REPORT 20 TORPEDO BOATS LOST.

Hundreds of Bodies Reported Floating Near Scene of Great Battle in North Sea.

COPENHAGEN, June 3.—Hundreds of bodies, many of them horribly mutilated by explosions, and great quantities of debris are drifting about in the North sea near the scene of the battle between German and British fleets.

All steamers arriving at Denmark ports report sighting floating bodies and bits of wreckage.

The steamer Para arrived today, having picked up a raft aboard which were three German survivors from the torpedo boat V-48. They had clung to the raft for forty-eight hours and were semi-conscious when rescued. They reported that ninety-nine of the V-48 crew perished and that in all about twenty German torpedo boats were destroyed.

HOW QUEEN MARY WAS SUNK

Concentrated Fire of Germans Caused Explosion—British Ship Lost in Two Minutes.

LONDON, June 4, 3 a. m.—The manner in which the big British battle cruiser Queen Mary came to its end is described by an east coast town correspondent of the Weekly dispatch. The ship, according to this correspondent, was sunk by the concentrated gun fire of the German capital ships causing its magazine to explode with terrific force. The forward part of the ship was blown away almost bodily and the Queen Mary went down in less than two minutes.

BERLIN THRILLED AS NEW REPORTS SHOW VICTORIES

Germans Think England Has Been Divested of Her Mastery of the Seas.

BERLIN, June 3.—Swinging at anchor tonight in its home port is Germany's high seas battle squadron.

The North sea is the grave of at least fourteen British ships, including such first line vessels as the Queen Mary. Germany has felt the full force of England's much vaunted squadron through which she has claimed the mastery of the seas.

Germany feels that after years of endeavor and preparation her highest hope has been realized. England had declared the German fleet dare not come out. It went out, encountered the British, defeated them, and returned. The spell of English naval power is broken.

Vice Admiral Scheer, commander of the German squadron, is the new hero of the fatherland. His name will take its place along with those of Von Hindenburg and Von Mackensen.

Vessels of All Types.

Admiral Hebbinghaus reported that battleships, battle cruisers, cruisers, torpedo boats, destroyers, and every type of boat in the North sea, participated in the battle. At least thirty-four British ships, including dreadnaughts of the first line, were in action, the admiralty stated.

Except for the loss of the Pommern, the Wiesbaden, the Frauenloeb and about six destroyers, the German fleet returned to its base with its men in high spirits and ships and materials have proved their excellence.

The loss in men will not exceed two thousand at the outside, against the enormous losses of the enemy, it is declared. And against the 100,000 tons loss among first line British ships, the German loss will not exceed 13,200 tons.

Germans Destroy Own Ship.

An official statement, issued today by the chief of the admiralty staff, says:

In order to prevent fabulous reports, it is again stated that in the battle off Skagerak on May 31, the German high sea forces were in battle with the entire modern English fleet.

To the already published statements it must be added that, according to the official British report, the battle cruiser Invincible and the armored cruiser Warrior were destroyed.

We were obliged to blow up the small cruiser Elbing, which on the night of May 31-June 1, owing to a collision with another German war vessel, was heavily damaged, and it was impossible to take it to port. The crew was rescued by torpedo boats, with the exception of the commander, two officers, and sixtxeen men, who remained aboard in order to blow up the vessel.

According to Dutch reports, they were later brought to Ymuiden on a tug and landed there.

Report Made to Reichstag.

The reichstag received the following report which was made by Vice Admiral Hebbinghaus:

On the afternoon of May 31 part of our fleet engaged in combat with a superior British fleet of at least thirty-four modern great battleships.

The battle went on until 9 p. m., when it became dark, and during the night a series of single cruiser and torpedo boat attacks took place.

It was ascertained that the losses of the British, which were partly confirmed by rescued British sailors, are the Warspite, Indefatigable, and Queen Mary, two armored cruisers of the Achilles type, one small cruiser, and destroyer flagships Turbulent, Nestor, and Alcaster, and, further, nine or ten destroyers of which our battleship Westfalen alone sank six during the night attacks.

His majesty's ship Frauenlob must be definitely considered lost. The ship sank, apparently, during the night of May 31 and June 1, during a partial engagement.

Of the German torpedo boats, five have not returned, but a large part of the crews were rescued.

Scheer in Supreme Command.

Vice Admiral Scheer was in command of the German high seas fleet and Vice Admiral Hipper commanded the reconnoitering force which was first drawn into the battle, a semi-official statement giving further details of the engagement stated.

BRITISH REMAIN MASTERS OF SEA, CHURCHILL SAYS

Battle with German Fleet Cuts Little Figure in England's Power; Compares Losses.

LONDON, June 3.—Great Britain still holds undisputed supremacy of the seas, in the judgment of Winston Spencer Churchill, recently first lord of the admiralty, who now has resumed his parliamentary duties after service with his regiment at the front, and whose opinions on naval matters are still eagerly sought in England, Col. Churchill gave the Associated Press the following statement today:

"I have had an opportunity of examining the reports of the admirals and of considering the information in the possession of the admiralty. The following facts seem to me to be established:

"The naval supremacy of the British fleet in capital ships depends upon superdreadnaughts armed with 13.5 inch and 15 inch guns, and these are sufficient by themselves to maintain control of the seas.

"Of these vital units of the first rank, we have only lost one—the Queen Mary. There appears to be no doubt that the Germans have lost at least one comparable ship. If this should be the Lutzow or the Derfflinger, that vessel is a heavier loss to them actually and relatively than the Queen Mary is to us.

Big Ship Loss Comparable.

"Coming to vessels of the second order we have lost the Indefatigable and the Invincible. These are of an entirely different class from the superdreadnaughts, and, valuable vessels as they are, do not arnk as primary units at the present time. A dreadnaught battleship of the Westfalen type would be a loss comparable to either.

"The armored cruisers Black Prince, Defense, and Warrior belonged to the third order of ships, of which we possess a very large superiority. The sinking of the two brand new German light cruisers Wiesbaden and Elbing is, in fact, a more grievous loss to the enemy.

"In all these vessels the most serious feature is the loss of their splendid and irreplaceable crews.

Destroyer Casualties Equal.

"The destroyer casualties appear to be about equal. On these terms we, being the stronger, are the gainers. Our flotillas have long sought such opportunities. Our margin of superiority is in no way impaired. The dispatch of troops to the continent should continue with the utmost freedom, the battered condition of the German fleet being an additional security to us.

"The hazy weather, the fall of night and the retreat of the enemy alone frustrated the persevering efforts of our brilliant commanders, Sir John Jellicoe and Sir David Beatty, to force a final decision. Although it was not possible to compel the German main fleet to accept battle, the conclusions reached are of extreme importance.

"All classes of vessels on both sides have now met, and we know that there are no surprises or unforeseen features. An accurate measure can be taken of the strength of the enemy, and his definite superiority is freed from any element of uncertainty."

KING CONGRATULATES JELLICOE ON BATTLE

LONDON, June 3.—The British official press bureau today made public the text of messages exchanged between King George and Admiral Jellicoe, commander in chief of the British grand fleet, on the occasion of the king's birthday. Admiral Jellicoe's message read:

"On the occasion of your majesty's birthday the officers and men of the grand fleet in humble duty send their respectful, heartfelt good wishes, with the loyal hope and determination that through victory for your majesty's arms and those of our gallant allies the blessings of peace may be restored. ADMIRAL JELLICOE."

The king replied:

"I am deeply touched by the message you have sent in behalf of the grand fleet. It reaches me on the morrow of a battle which once more displayed the splendid gallantry of the officers and men under your command.

"I mourn the loss of the brave men, many of them personal friends of my own, who have fallen in their country's cause. Yet even more do I regret that the German high seas fleet, in spite of heavy losses, was enabled by misty weather to evade the full consequences of the encounter.

"They always professed a desire for which, when the opportunity arrived, they showed no inclination. Though the retirement of the enemy immediately after the opening of a general engagement robbed us of the opportunity of gaining a decisive victory, the events of last Wednesday amply justify my confidence in the valor and efficiency of the fleet under your command. GEORGE, R. I."

DEWEY SAYS BATTLE LESSON IS TO BUILD DREADNAUGHTS.

Urges U. S. to Add Battleships to Program as Showing Superiority—Relies on Senate.

Washington, D. C., June 3.—[Special.]—George Dewey, the admiral of the navy and president of the general board, is keenly interested in the news of the German and British clash in the North sea. He was at his office early this morning, as usual, awaiting additional details.

"We will, of course, endeavor to profit by every lesson that can be conveyed to the United States navy by the North sea fight," he said. "The general board has recommended battleships as well as battle cruisers for this year's naval building program.

"There is no secret made of the fact that we still hope to see two battleships in the navy bill before it is passed by the senate.

"The battleship, which can give and take and stand up and fight, is now, and always has been, the main bulwark of our naval strength and the main strength of any navy. I hear the opinion already expressed that the North sea fight demonstrates this.

"We have no battle cruisers and I think a squadron of these vessels would be a welcome addition to the navy, but I hope to see battleships provided for at the same time. Two battleships and four battle cruisers would, I believe, be vastly superior to five, or even six, battle cruisers."

BRITISH SAILORS DEMENTED AS RESULT OF SEA BATTLE.

Several of Those Picked Up from Shark by Danish Ship Captain Insane from Terrific Fire.

[BY CABLE TO THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

HULL, June 3.—The captain of the Danish steamer Virdar, which rescued a number of the crew of the British destroyer Shark, says: "Several of the poor fellows were partially demented as they came round and one wanted to jump overboard. 'Where is my captain?' was the exclamation of one as he came round, and I was told afterwards he was one of the three who were firing the last gun as the vessel sank. The commander, who also was at his gun, had his left leg shot away above the knee and was swept into the sea as the Shark sank."

AMERICAN OFFICER IS SAFE.

Baltimore, Md., June 3.—A cablegram was received here today by relatives of Lieut. Commander Powers Symington, United States naval attaché in London, who was reported on board a British battleship sunk in the North sea, announcing he was safe in London.

CITY AMBULANCE HITS BOY.

George Gaynor, 13 years old, of 2725 Ward street was riding a bicycle west in Diversey parkway yesterday when he turned in front of the automobile ambulance of the Chicago avenue police station. The boy was only bruised and was taken to his home.

MEN WANTED

FOR THE CORPS OF ENGINEERS, ILL. N. G.

After witnessing the demonstration of Saturday for preparedness, what have you decided to do for your country? Will you prepare, and allow your employes to do so, or will you urge preparedness for others only? The time for talk is over; do something.

The State of Illinois, with its great population, has only seventy men in its Corps of Engineers.

You are needed. Do not hesitate because you are not an engineer; you will be made one. The Company will spend two weeks, beginning July 3d, in camp with regular army engineers at Belvoir Tract, Va., near Washington, D. C.

Not only no expense to you, but pay while there. You will learn bridge building, demolition, surveying, infantry drill, fortification, and general engineering. Apply at Armory, 2356 Lincoln Avenue, Tuesday evenings, or see Lieut. Swift, 704 Fisher Building, any time, or call him at Harrison 6557.

INDUSTRIAL PREPAREDNESS

A STRAIGHT-FROM-THE-SHOULDER TALK TO YOU!

The tremendous propaganda for preparedness which yesterday throughout the country crystallized in the most overwhelming demonstration the world has ever witnessed, has a deeper moral than mere preparedness for military protection.

There is no true preparedness for any great measure until its incentive finds root in the whole development of our civic and industrial life.

Prepare!* Let us prepare not only against the military invasion of real or imaginary foes, but let us prepare to even greater lengths by putting our industrial house in order. Let this greatest of all truths sink into your mind now, Mr. Business Man. "The backbone of every and all effective preparedness lies in the strength of our industrial fabric." Our industrial fabric is composed of your business—the business of your neighbor—and the business of countless thousands of others whose individual industries are but the small molecules which make up the greatest commercial and industrial nation that the history of the world has ever witnessed.

IT TOOK THE THREAT OF AN IMMINENT CRISIS TO AWAKEN US TO a realization of our greatest national and civic weakness, but when we awoke we awoke as a unit—we awoke as one hundred million people combined into one unit for one specific purpose—preparedness.

LET THE REAL SIGNIFICANCE OF THIS AWAKENING BE AN OBJECT lesson to you in the conduct of your own individual business. A surplus of prosperity has made us blind to economic waste. A proportionate share of this economic waste prevails right at home—in your individual business.

THE CUTTING OF COSTS AND UNNECESSARY OVERHEAD WITHIN your own business institution is your greatest immediate opportunity for preparedness. Start now by conducting an immediate investigation into that department which offers the biggest possibilities for economic reorganization—your delivery and hauling department.

THERE IS ALREADY A NEW ERA IN HAULING AND DELIVERY. IT IS the era of the motor truck. Beyond all possibility of question, it has been demonstrated that motor truck transportation is the most economic form of delivery that you can employ.

AND NOW A NEW ERA IN MOTOR TRUCK TRANSPORTATION HAS DEVELOPED—it is the era of the Smith Form-a-Truck. Just twice as much for half the price—that is the story.

UPSETTING ALL PREVIOUS STANDARDS OF SUCCESS, THE DEMAND for Smith Form-a-Trucks in the past six months has exceeded in volume thirteen million dollars.

FORTY PER CENT OF ALL THE MOTOR TRUCKS THAT WILL BE BUILT in the United States this year will be Smith Form-a-Trucks. Fifty thousand is the number. This equals the total combined motor truck production of all makes last year. And the potential users of the Smith Form-a-Truck cover every line of industry in the United States where delivery or hauling is a problem.

SERVICE RECORDS COMPILED FROM THOUSANDS OF SOURCES HAVE proved a time and money saving of four to one over horse drawn service. Everywhere in competition, where speed of delivery, economy of gasoline consumption, simplicity of operation, low upkeep and repair cost have been considered, the Smith Form-a-Truck has romped away with the business.

THE MOST EXACTING BUYERS OF THE BIGGEST CORPORATIONS—the shrewdest purchasing agents, who reckon operating costs to the fraction of a penny, are our biggest buyers.

THE WORLD FAMOUS RECORDS OF PERFORMANCE AND ECONOMY of the Ford car, combined with the indestructible Smith Form-a-Truck attachment, gives you a 365-day-in-the-year truck service at half the usual first cost—and half the cost of upkeep and operation.

THESE ARE BIG STATEMENTS: BUT WE CAN PROVE THEM. IT IS BY proving them that we have created the most phenomenal record ever experienced in the transportation world.

THE SMITH FORM-A-TRUCK IS AN ENGINEERING ACHIEVEMENT. It is practically an everlasting rear end truck attachment that fits over the chassis of any old or new Ford car, like a drawer in a desk, reinforcing the frame throughout. The Smith Form-a-Truck attachment itself is 14 feet long. It gives a wheelbase of 125 inches—it gives a loading space back of the driver's seat of 9 feet—large enough to accommodate any standard or special type of body you may want to use.

STRENGTH AND PERMANENCE ARE BUILT INTO THE SMITH FORM-A-Truck attachment. The frame is of pressed steel, channel section 4 inches deep, reinforced with gusset plates and three cross members. Wheels are artillery type with twelve spokes two inches square. Tires are the solid Firestone truck type 32 inches x 3½ inches. Driving system includes a specially designed heavy steel axle with double sprockets and chains carrying power to the rear wheels—and the wonderful time tested Ford rear axle is used as jackshaft without changing the Ford power plant in any way.

THIS REMARKABLE ONE TON TRUCK, BUILT BY COMBINING A SMITH Form-a-Truck and a Ford chassis, averages in speed from 12 to 15 miles per hour, and in gasoline consumption it averages from 12 to 20 miles per gallon; in tire service the average is from six to eight thousand miles per set of tires. Repair costs are practically eliminated, and the ton mile hauling cost can be safely estimated at less than four cents a mile.

THIS WONDERFUL SMITH FORM-A-TRUCK ATTACHMENT CAN BE INSTALLED on any Ford chassis by two inexperienced men in a few hours. And it is not necessary for you to learn how to operate the truck if you understand the operation of the Ford car, for the Smith Form-a-Truck is driven the same as any Ford pleasure car.

IF YOU USE MOTOR TRUCKS NOW, THE SMITH FORM-A-TRUCK WILL cost you 50% less to buy than any other fully guaranteed one ton truck in your service, and 40% less to operate. And it will more than double the efficiency of your delivery department if you are using trucks of greater capacity, because it will make more trips and work more continuously at capacity load.

THE NECESSITY OF INDUSTRIAL PREPAREDNESS—THE REALIZATION of true economy in your business—demands your immediate investigation of the Smith Form-a-Truck. We are prepared for you—prepared to make any demonstration that is necessary—prepared to show proof of any record of service you may want to see—and prepared to take care of you in immediate deliveries, no matter whether you order a single Smith Form-a-Truck or a whole fleet.

TELL US YOUR HAULING PROBLEM. OUR TRANSPORTATION ENGINEERS will show you where the Smith Form-a-Truck will save you money. This will incur absolutely no obligation on your part—put it up to us.

CALL—PHONE—OR WRITE US TODAY.

INDUSTRIAL PREPAREDNESS IS THE KEYNOTE OF YOUR ULTIMATE success—PREPARE ! ! !

OLD GUARD SITS TIGHT IN THE SADDLE

T. R. AHEAD IN POLL OF CITIES IN MID-WEST

Has Big Lead in Chicago Postcard Test—Vote in Six Centers.

THE TRIBUNE and several other newspapers of the middle west have cooperated on a postcard poll of Republican voters in representative wards of the various cities.

In Chicago a postcard was sent to every Republican voter on the poll books of the Sixth and Twenty-fifth wards. About 30,000 cards were sent out and about 5,500 replies were received. Similar methods were adopted in Cincinnati, Cleveland, Milwaukee, and Galesburg. A state-wide poll was made in Kansas.

The postcards contained the names of the fourteen leading candidates with a table permitting the reader to indicate his first, second, and third choice.

T. R. WAY AHEAD HERE.

Col. Roosevelt received 3,994 votes in Chicago as against 865 for Sherman, his next competitor for first place, and 766 for Hughes, third for first.

In Cincinnati Roosevelt led with 444 votes for first choice as against 404 for Burton, Ohio's favorite son.

In Cleveland Burton led Roosevelt, who received 144 votes to the Ohioan's 220 for first place.

Roosevelt was second for first place in Milwaukee, with 519, while Hughes received 903.

In Kansas Hughes leads for first place with 606 votes; Root is next with 193, and Roosevelt third with 179.

CHICAGO.

Hughes is the favorite second choice in Chicago, having 1,686 votes, with 959 for Sherman and 533 for Roosevelt.

Elihu Root is the hot favorite for third choice, having 1,244 votes to 868 for Hughes and 525 for the Oyster Bay man. The voters didn't think of the colonel in second or third choice terms.

TWENTY-FIFTH WARD.

	First choice.	Second choice.	Third choice.
Sherman	537	596	432
Roosevelt	2,206	307	240

MANY FREAK REPLIES.

Dozens of freak replies were sent in, many of which were amusing. One Ford enthusiast, enumerating his idea of the shortcomings of the candidates, says: "Think of it, asking an honest man to select a candidate from a bunch like Second highest honors in this year's class of graduates of the United States naval academy at Annapolis have been won by an Illinois boy, Midshipman Norman P. Earle, a son of Dr. C. A. Earle of Des Plaines. In a class of 178 he was second only to H. M. Mullinix of Indiana. Members of the class obtained their diplomas yesterday. Midshipman Earle has been assigned to the torpedo boat destroyer Wadsworth, one of the latest and speediest additions to the navy.

CONVENTION DELEGATE, BURTON SUPPORTER, DEAD.

A. B. Wood of Oklahoma Stricken and Passes Away in Wesley Hospital.

A. B. Wood, aged 69, of Mulhall, Okla., a delegate to the Republican national convention, died yesterday in Wesley hospital of cancer of the liver. Mr. Wood was a veteran of the civil war and a trustee of a Methodist hospital in Oklahoma.

Senator Burton of Ohio lost a staunch supporter in the death of Mr. Wood, who spoke to attendants and physicians at the hospital of his warm regard for the Ohio aspirant and said they had been school chums.

Although advised that it would be better for him to return to his home, Mr. Wood refused to consider abandoning the national convention and asserted as late as Thursday that he "felt fine." Dr. C. P. White, who, with Dr. Charles Elliott, attended him, said:

"He was in a bad condition when he came here last Wednesday, although he said he 'felt fine.' And, indeed, in spite of his condition, he was down town all Thursday afternoon. He insisted he would not think of going home, though he knew, of course, that his condition was serious."

WADSWORTH ON GROUND; ISSUES STRONG ROOT BOOST

New York Leader Holds His Candidate for President Will Have Majority of Empire State.

State Chairman Fred C. Tanner, Senator James W. Wadsworth, Elon R. Brown, and Herbert Parsons, former Roosevelt leader in Brooklyn, formed a big four quartet that arrived last night at Root headquarters.

Senator Wadsworth issued a formal statement, urging Mr. Root's nomination, as follows:

"Mr. Root's name will be presented to the convention by a majority of the New York convention. His candidacy means no attack on any other candidate or group. The men urging it are profoundly convinced that he is eminently fit to be president.

"Mr. Root, if nominated, will carry New York by a big majority and that means forty-four electoral votes. I do not think there is going to be any difficulty in the party getting together on both the platform and the candidate. There is a very marked spirit of conciliation apparent everywhere."

WEST DOES NOT CONCEDE DEFEAT TO THOMPSON.

Downstate Men Say Bulk of Their Vote Will Not Go to Thompson for National Committeeship.

Roy O. West does not concede that Mayor Thompson has sewed up the Illinois national committeeship. On the contrary, the West men from downstate began to arrive last night, claiming, with all sincerity, that the bulk of the downstate vote will not go to the mayor and that if it is a two man race, Mr. West will be reëlected.

The mayor's friends reiterated their sure thing statement and placed the mayor's strength at a minimum of thirty-one.

Indications are that the situation will become so tense that Senator Sherman, personally, may be forced into taking sides, necessitating a flat declaration from him as to which of the two candidates he intends to support.

Former Gov. Deneen is expected to take command of the West forces this morning.

RADICAL MOOSE REBEL AGAINST PERKINS DICKER

Wilson Rather than Surrender to Old Guard Minus T. R., They Say.

Rebellion broke out last night among Progressive party delegates on convention row, with these developments in the camp of the radicals:

Plans laid to proceed in the ordinary course of events to nominate Theodore Roosevelt in the Moose convention, or some other "good Progressive," regardless of what the Republicans intend to do.

Also to put a third ticket in the field and make a losing fight rather than surrender to the "old guard" of 1912.

In the midst of the flareup, with the "hotheads" openly defying the Perkins faction, the information came from Oyster Bay that Col. Roosevelt might himself land in the midst of the convention mob the middle of the week.

Roosevelt May Come.

While Col. Roosevelt was quoted again as saying in Oyster Bay last night that he would remain at home "unless some unforeseen emergency arises which would demand his presence in Chicago," radical boosters on convention row heard that Roosevelt is displeased with the way his friends have been dickering with the Republican chiefs.

If he comes, they say, it will be to serve notice in person on the Progressive convention that it cannot afford to deliver itself "body and boots" into the hands of the "reactionaries" even to secure Roosevelt's nomination.

T. R. Make Moose Race?

Whether Col. Roosevelt would accept the nomination of the Moose convention and make another third party fight this fall is not known to the radicals here. Col. Roosevelt in Oyster Bay last night denied that he had said he would accept the Moose nomination.

This was one of the points discussed in a conference of the "real Roosevelt" men yesterday afternoon. They considered without reaching a final decision the question as to whether they should ask Roosevelt to "make the sacrifice" again.

It was their decision, however, to nominate some other prominent Progressive if Roosevelt should decline to lead the third party movement in the event of the Republicans swallowing the Progressives with a reactionary.

Wilson Rather than Old Guard.

The radicals declared openly last night they would rather have President Wilson reëlected than to see the Republicans regain control of the government with any one who was affiliated with the "steam roller" forces four years ago.

This rebellion assumed such serious proportions at a late hour that the advisability was considered of sending for Roosevelt to come on and handle the situation himself.

The compromisers, led by Mr. Perkins, got a real scare when Gov. Johnson of California issued a red hot statement which indicated that he was not in favor of dickering with the Republican chiefs on any basis other than the nomination of Roosevelt. Johnson had been counted on to keep cool by the Perkins forces, but his final declaration for Roosevelt and no one else as the man to defeat Wilson caused consternation among the Moosers.

Johnson Edict Sizzles.

"There is but one logical outcome to the situation confronting the Republican and Progressive conventions," said Gov. Johnson. "If Mr. Wilson is defeated or ought to be defeated it will be upon the clear cut, definitet issue of preparedness and Americanism. This issue has been made by just one man—Theodore Roosevelt."

Gov. Johnson's statement, besides creating a sensation, stated the feelings of a majority of the Progressive delegates, the radicals declared, and it is all summed up in the one phrase:

"The issue is Theodore Roosevelt—he's both the candidate and the platform."

Perkins for Harmony.

Mr. Perkins, meanwhile, continued his efforts at getting the Republican chiefs to go into the harmony program on the basis of Roosevelt's nomination, or possibly some other candidate. It was Mr. Perkins' statement, issued earlier in the day, that the Progressives would not insist that Roosevelt was the only man who could bring the two parties together, that roiled the radicals in the Moose camp.

Mr. Perkins admitted that his forces might not be able to control the Progressive convention Wednesday, and fear even was expressed that the radicals might take the reins in their own hands, discard all conventionalities, and nominate Roosevelt the first day.

That, they believe, would bring Roosevelt to Chicago on the next train, and he would himself then decide whether he ought to lead a third ticket fight.

Count on Business Men.

While Roosevelt's actual delegate strength continued to be an almost negligible quality at this time, the Moose leaders counted largely on the tremendous influence of the business men of the nation,

Allies Declare They Will Name G. O. P. Nominee

PENROSE A PROBLEM

"Our lines are stronger than they have been at any time. We are certain of enough delegates working harmoniously together to nominate the candidate for president. Our friends will discuss the proposition in a spirit of entire harmony, and a candidate ultimately will be agreed upon whom all of us can and will support."

This is the platform of the combination that is working in the open to control the national convention, as enunciated by one of its leaders who is thoroughly in touch with every candidate and every state delegation classified as "friendly."

The first caucus will not be held before Tuesday night. This is known definitely. Meantime each candidate, his shouters and his managers will be granted every chance and opportunity, untrammeled by any interest represented in the combination, to develop his fullest possible strength.

Penrose Men Uncertain.

The serious difficulties which the managers of the combination realize in the way of a successful culmination of their plans is the alleged vacillation of Penrose in Pennsylvania and the failure of Smoot in Utah to "come clean" for Root.

Within the inner circle it is ascertained that Penrose has been driven into the position of having to be for Roosevelt if the Roosevelt candidacy gets in striking distance of the nomination. Smoot had been figured as absolutely certain to support Root. The best that the combination now expects from Smoot is a fifty-fifty split of his eight votes on the first ballot, with the probability that the entire eight will be voted for Hughes on the second ballot.

Little Change in Lineup.

The gathering of the delegates and the big chiefs has made little material change in the first ballot situation from that indicated in the tabulation made by THE TRIBUNE last Sunday.

The national committee disposed of the Georgia contests, and instead of Roosevelt having seventeen from Georgia, as was figured last week, Hughes or Roosevelt will have five and the rest will be split between Root, Sherman, Weeks, and Fairbanks.

The Louisiana Lily White delegation, if it is seated in the permanent organization of the convention by the credentials committee, is now conceded by the combination managers to Hughes, an even dozen votes.

If Walter Cohen's black and tan delegation gets the permanent credentials, it is understood that the twelve votes will be split between Root, Weeks, and Fairbanks.

Badger Men Divided.

The Wisconsin delegation, instead of voting solidly for La Follette, is now split three ways. La Follette gets the sixteen that he elected in the direct primaries and Gov. Philipp will lead seven into the Hughes camp. The other three have revolted against Philipp and announce that they will vote for Burton.

The arrival of Murray Crane, bringing with him the declaration that the entire vote of Massachusetts will be cast for Weeks on the first ballot, tends to eliminate Gov. McCall from the list, for the time being at least. The Missouri friends of former Gov. Hadley also have decided that the nomination can come to him only by way of a protracted deadlock, and they will not vote for him at the outset of the balloting.

THE TRIBUNE'S table, as compared with last week's, is readjusted for New Hampshire. Weeks loses four votes, which will be split evenly between Root and Hughes. Two of Roosevelt's votes are marked off in Colorado, as is one for Cummins, and Fairbanks gains one and Root two. In Alabama, Root loses two to Hughes. In Kentucky two are subtracted from Burton and divided between Roosevelt and Hughes.

The New Mexico delegation will give Burton, Fairbanks, and Root one vote each, additional to last week's figures, deducting two from Sherman and one from Roosevelt. Sherman and Weeks pick up one vote each and Burton two, while Root and Roosevelt are losing two each in the state of Washington.

The total vote now claimed as certain by the managers of the combination to stand together is 547.

NEW YORK DELEGATION OFF.

Root Boosters to Flock to Hughes, Belief—No Chance for Roosevelt, Leader Says.

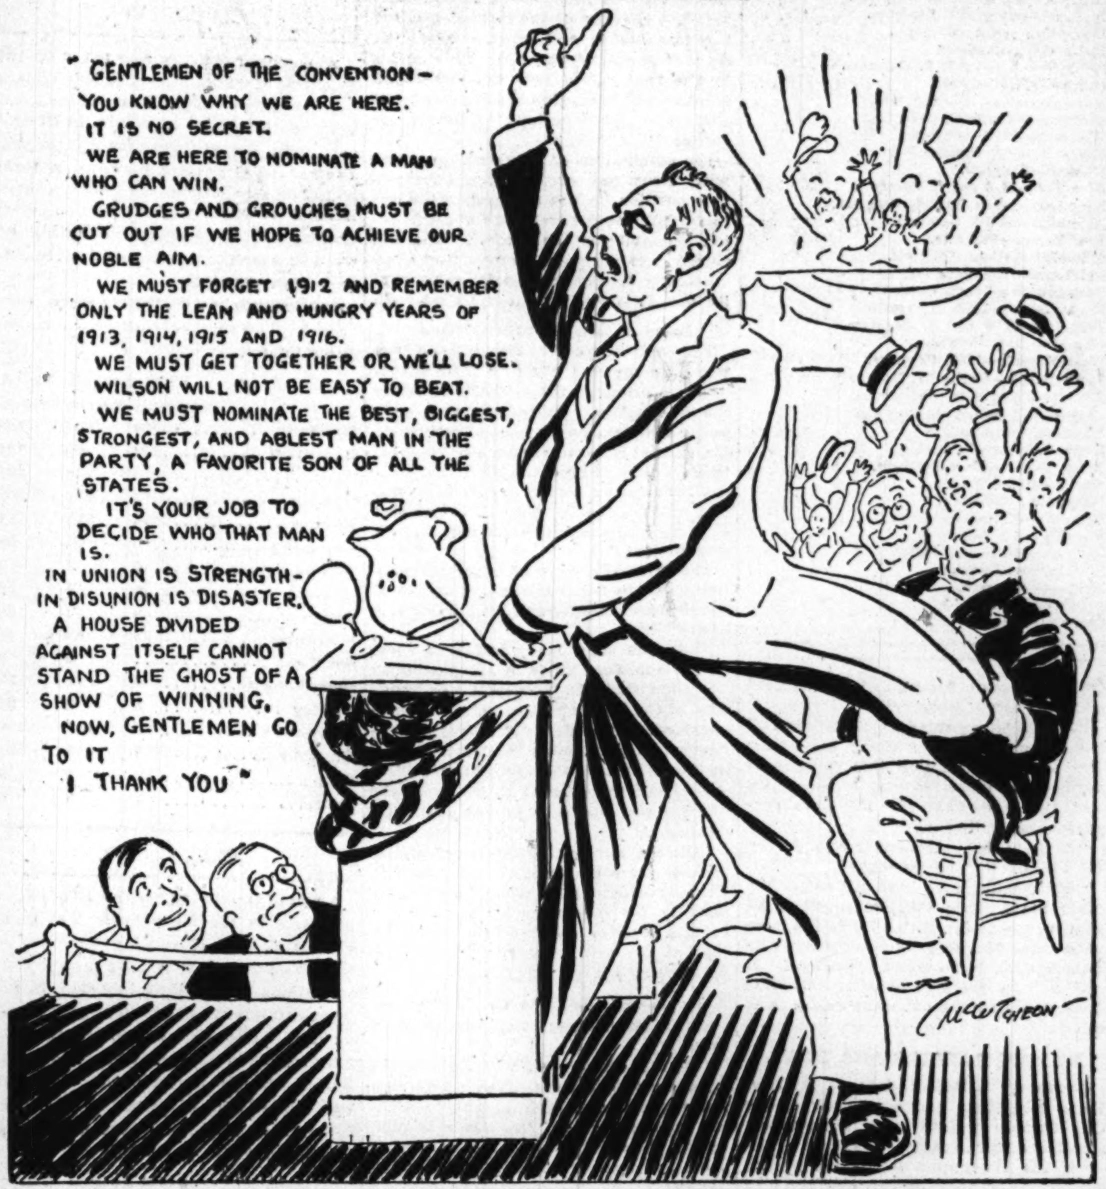
New York, June 3.—Nearly 200 Republicans, including most of the New York City delegates to the Republican national convention, left today on the New York Central "convention special" for Chicago. On its way through the state the train will stop at the chief cities to receive other delegates and eventually it will be composed of fifteen cars.

As the delegation was leaving Samuel S. Koenig, chairman of the New York county Republican committee, said:

"Elihu Root probably will receive thirty-five votes from our state on the first ballot. Then the demand for Hughes will increase until the sixth or seventh ballot, when it will have become the unanimous cry of the New York delegation. I cannot conceive of Roosevelt being selected under any circumstances."

SUGGESTIONS FOR A NICE LITTLE KEYNOTE SPEECH

(Copyright: 1916: By John T. McCutcheon.)



"GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—
YOU KNOW WHY WE ARE HERE.
IT IS NO SECRET.
WE ARE HERE TO NOMINATE A MAN WHO CAN WIN.
GRUDGES AND GROUCHES MUST BE CUT OUT IF WE HOPE TO ACHIEVE OUR NOBLE AIM.
WE MUST FORGET 1912 AND REMEMBER ONLY THE LEAN AND HUNGRY YEARS OF 1913, 1914, 1915 AND 1916.
WE MUST GET TOGETHER OR WE'LL LOSE.
WILSON WILL NOT BE EASY TO BEAT.
WE MUST NOMINATE THE BEST, BIGGEST, STRONGEST, AND ABLEST MAN IN THE PARTY, A FAVORITE SON OF ALL THE STATES.
IT'S YOUR JOB TO DECIDE WHO THAT MAN IS.
IN UNION IS STRENGTH—IN DISUNION IS DISASTER.
A HOUSE DIVIDED AGAINST ITSELF CANNOT STAND THE GHOST OF A SHOW OF WINNING.
NOW, GENTLEMEN GO TO IT
I THANK YOU"

GET OUT VOTES FOR JUDGE RACE

Party Leaders Also Emphasize Bond Issues at Tomorrow's Poll.

With seven judges to be selected for the Superior court and bond issues totaling $10,850,000 to be passed upon, leaders for all parties and factions were busy yesterday making final preparations to get out the votes for the election tomorrow. For the judicial election both Republicans and Democrats have printed slips with which to notify delinquent voters and tell them the locality of their polling place. Estimates on the total vote range from 100,000 to 250,000.

Republicans, Democrats, and Socialists have full tickets in the field for the election, while Progressives have two entries, seeking two of the six full terms to be filled on the Superior bench. Andrew J. Redmond, Republican candidate to fill the vacancy in the Superior court, was indorsed yesterday by Cook county Progressives, who have put up no candidate in opposition to him. Joseph B. David is Redmond's Democratic opponent.

Here Are the Candidates.

The candidates for the six full terms are:

REPUBLICAN.	DEMOCRATIC.
Robert E. Turney,	R. E. Burke,
George A. Dupuy,	Charles A. McDonald,
Hosea W. Wells,	Martin M. Gridley,
Robert E. Crowe,	W. F. Cooper,
Henry Utpatel,	W. E. Dever,
E. J. Herdlicka.	John J. Sullivan.

The two Progressive candidates are John T. Richards and Russel D. Whitman.

But little money has been sent to the precincts by the opposing organizations. Because of the refusal of one of their candidates to contribute his assessment of $3,700 to the campaign fund, the Republicans are endeavoring to keep the distribution down to $8 a precinct, allowing in some cases an increase to $10. The Democrats have assessed each candidate for the full term $3,000 and David $500 and are sending $10 to each precinct.

Women Vote on Bonds.

While the women are not permitted to vote for the judicial candidates, they will be able to cast their ballots on the three bond issues submitted. The largest of the proposed issues is one of $5,100,000 to be authorized by the city council for the building of bridges in the city. With this amount it is planned to replace the old center pier draw bridges in accordance with the demands of the federal government, and also to construct bridges at points where the river is not now crossed—with a view toward relieving traffic congestion.

The next largest of the proposed issues provides for $3,750,000 in bonds for the extension of the municipal street lighting system of Chicago. This contemplates the enlargement of the municipal lighting plant and other improvements in street lights.

In addition to the two proposed municipal bond issues, there is also to be voted on a proposal for $2,000,000 in county bonds. With the proceeds of these bonds it is planned to obtain a site and erect "thereon new buildings for the criminal court and the county jail for Cook county."

WISCONSIN MEN ARRIVING.

National Committeeman Rogers Says They Will Caucus Tuesday.

Alfred T. Rogers, present national committeeman for Wisconsin, announced yesterday that the Wisconsin caucus will be held at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning in parlor K in the Kaiserhof hotel.

The Wisconsin delegates began to arrive yesterday afternoon, and the delegation is expected to be complete by Tuesday morning.

Mr. Rogers was noncommittal as to the lineup of the delegation, saying, "It is a little early to give out a statement."

ART INSTITUTE OPEN FREE.

The Art institute will be open free during the period of the Republican convention in Chicago, beginning Tuesday, June 6.

CANDIDATES' CLAIMS

Tabulation of First Ballot Hopes as Given Out by the Various Headquarters.

The Associated Press last night sent out the following tabulation of first ballot strength summarizing the claims made at the various headquarters:

Hughes	292	Knox	56
Weeks	200	Brumbaugh	41
Roosevelt	175	Ford	30
Burton	112	La Follette	26
Cummins	106	Gen. Wood	15
Fairbanks	93	Du Pont	14
Root	75	Borah	8
Sherman	65

To verify claims of the different candidates there would have to be 1,308 delegates in the convention, while the number of delegates with votes in the gathering is only 985.

SEES HUGHES IN THE LEAD.

George B. Caldwell of Investment Bankers Association Says Wilson Is Not Wanted.

Hughes first, Roosevelt second, and Wilson not at all is the way bankers, brokers, and big business stand on the political question, in the opinion of George B. Caldwell, formerly president of the Investment Bankers' association. He passed through Chicago yesterday on his way to the association meeting in Kansas City.

"The east is for Justice Hughes. Undoubtedly his silence is an obstacle to his nomination, but he will get the nomination in spite of himself.

"The bankers and brokers are not friendly to the present administration, because it has snubbed them. For this reason, I believe, either Hughes or Roosevelt, if nominated, will get a larger vote than has ever been cast."

HUGHES HOLDS INSIDE TRACK TO NOMINATION

Henning Finds Justice May Gain Victory on the Third Ballot.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Hughes will be nominated for president on an early ballot in the Republican national convention next Friday, if the Old Guard so wills it.

He might be nominated despite the old guard, but only after a protracted and bitter struggle in the midst of which the associate justice of the Supreme court undoubtedly would withdraw his name from consideration.

Roosevelt cannot be nominated at any time unless the Old Guard swings into line for the colonel.

If both Hughes and Roosevelt should be eliminated Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman of Illinois stands probably the best chance of selection as the party standard bearer.

DRIFT OF COMMENT.

This is the Republican political situation as it shaped up last night. This was the drift of the comment among the gathering leaders in the convention as they passed in and out of conferences or paused to gaze down from their hotel windows upon the passing legions of marchers in the preparedness parade.

Although to enthusiastic Progressives and Roosevelt Republicans these advocates of a real preparedness seemed to be voicing in effect a demand for the redoubtable colonel of Sagamore and San Juan hills, the chief apostle of preparedness in political life, the demonstrations left the Old Guard and other "practical men" cold and unmoved in this respect. They interpreted the demonstration not as a call for Roosevelt, but as a demand for any Republican capable of leading the return to power of a party that stands for a greater degree of preparedness against war than do Woodrow Wilson and the Democrats.

COURTING THE OLD GUARD.

Hence the parade did not disturb the knitting of the old guardsmen, who are bent on eliminating Roosevelt unless something turns up to change their minds. They regard such a change of mind exceedingly remote, but they admit the possibility.

Murray Crane, Boies Penrose, Boss Barnes of New York, and the other old guardsmen found themselves persistently courted during the day by the friends of Roosevelt, the friends of Hughes, and the friends of the sundry favorite sons, for it had become apparent to all comers that the eastern leaders were playing the masterful politics of the big gathering and wielding the balance of power. Everywhere it was conceded the nomination will go exactly where the Old Guard for reasons sufficient unto itself wills that it shall go.

HUGHES HAS INSIDE TRACK.

Hughes clearly retains the "inside track" in the race for the nomination. Even the Roosevelt men and the favorite sons concede this. They admit that unless the situation changes materially in the next few days the Old Guard probably will decide to facilitate the nomination of the justice. Hughes on the third ballot is the prediction of many Republican leaders.

The friends of the justice, who have been canvassing the actual choice of the delegates after the complimentary voting of the first ballot, assert Mr. Hughes is the favorite of an overwhelming majority of the convention. They are claiming a minimum of 600 out of the 985 delegates. They also assert that if a secret ballot were possible fully 800 delegates would voice the opinion that Hughes is their first choice from the viewpoint of a leader capable of uniting the factions of the party and defeating President Wilson.

"Only the machinations of the Old Guard can prevent the expression of this choice on an early ballot," said one of the Hughes leaders last night. "Are the delegates who actually prefer Hughes going to allow the Old Guard to frustrate their will? I think not."

BOIES A "WEAK SISTER."

The present attitude of the Old Guardsmen, with one exception, is satisfactory to the anti-Roosevelt men. That exception is Penrose, mirabile dictu! Penrose, the arch reactionary, the protector of special privilege, the friend of Big Business, and the willing worker for Standard Oil, is weakening on opposition to his old enemy Roosevelt, though four years ago and even later they vilified each other with the utmost fervor. That the Old Guard has a weak sister and that this weak sister is Penrose was the word that passed through the convention camps, carrying cheer to the Rooseveltians and misgivings to the opponents of the colonel.

Barnes is implacable in his hatred of the man whom he failed so signally to dispose of in the famous libel suit. Crane is standing out manfully against Roosevelt and furthering the cause of Hughes. Both are viewing their friend Penrose as a weak sister.

GERMANS SEND PROTESTS.

When this aspect of the situation became known Mr. Penrose immediately became the recipient of many attentions. Before sundown he had been waited upon by the emissaries of the favorite sons and had received more than 1,000 telegrams from Pennsylvania Germans protesting against the possible nomination of Roosevelt. An exceedingly large number of these telegrams urged the selection of Hughes.

Inquiry developed that this campaign to whip Penrose back into line against Roosevelt is an organized effort on the part of German-Americans. The Pennsylvania telegrams were sent at the instance of Dr. Hexamer of Philadelphia, head of a great German-American organization. The aid of Dr. Hexamer was enlisted by a committee of Chicago German-Americans headed by Horace Brand.

At the headquarters of this Chicago committee the campaign against Roosevelt was in full blast during the day. Reports on the attitude of various Republican leaders toward Roosevelt were being received from trusted scouts and telegrams were being dispatched to the German-American organizations in various states to start backfires against those leaders and delegates who were manifesting any partiality for the cause of the colonel.

A MERE STARTER.

According to Charles Christman, president of the state federation of the Illinois branch of the German-American National alliance, who revealed the inspiration for the telegraphic assault, the Penrose attack is but a mere starter.

"Fifteen thousand letters and telegrams will be sent to the delegates from Illinois alone advising the Illinois delegation how the members of the German-American alliance stand on the Roosevelt candidacy," he said.

"Following the meeting of the alliance in Chicago last Sunday, at which twenty-eight states were represented, we decided to send a letter to all of the branches in the forty-four states in the union in which we are organized suggesting that they at once communicate with the various state delegations and leaders and protest against the Roosevelt movement."

Penrose did not betray any indication that this campaign was having any effect on his attitude. He reiterated the convention is to be an unbossed affair, and that the whole question of selecting the most available candidate to lead the party to victory will be thrashed out in the open. Privately he confided to friends that while he will vote his delegates for Knox, his personal preference is Fairbanks, but that Hughes will be acceptable, and that conditions may arise making the nomination of Roosevelt advisable.

OIL OUT FOR COLONEL.

Although the weakening of Penrose in opposition to Roosevelt stirred up a deal of commotion along convention row, it was not news to the eastern politicians. Penrose disclosed his tendency in this direction some time ago. He had advance information on the stand that Big Business is beginning to take in favor of the colonel. That Frank Vanderlip, president of the National City bank of New York, had come out for Roosevelt has convinced many Republicans that the Standard Oil crowd wants the colonol nominated.

"When Standard Oil expresses a preference, you will not find Penrose fighting it very aggressively," remarked a seasoned campaigner.

MURPHY FOR COLONEL?

The ranks of the Old Guard were augmented during the day by Former Gov. Franklin Murphy of New Jersey, who heads a delegation, the major portion of which is favorable to Hughes. It wasn't long before Murphy became the object of suspicion among the other Old Guardsmen, for he had a good word or two to say of Roosevelt.

"I want to say this for Col. Roosevelt," he declared. "He is doing more than any other one man in this country to further the cause of true Americanism and the movement for adequate preparedness against war."

"Is there any sentiment in New Jersey for Roosevelt?" he was asked.

"You should have been in Newark the other night when Col. Roosevelt spoke at a meeting over which I presided," replied Mr. Murphy. "You never witnessed such enthusiasm for a man. It was not necessary to question the folks down there to find out what was in their minds."

DEPEW RALLIES FOR ROOT.

Chauncey M. Depew, dean of the New York delegation and a retainer of the Old Guard, arrived and immediately sounded a call to rally to Root.

"If the convention wants the ablest, best equipped, most experienced and best qualified man for the presidency it will nominate Elihu Root," he asseverated. "The people would accept him with joy. The people are tired of educating men for public office and will turn with relief to a past master in the art of government."

A. M. Stevenson of Colorado, better known as "Big Steve," created a stir by coming out for Roosevelt, the man over whom he helped to run the steam roller in 1912.

"It is impossible to nominate Hughes," he said. "Roosevelt is the strongest candidate we can name—a man who can be relied upon to defeat Wilson—and he will unite the party, too."

INFLUENCE OF BIG BUSINESS.

Inasmuch as the Old Guard holds the key to the nomination, every conceivable effort is being made to swing the organization into line for the colonel, and as the Old Guard is generally more amenable to the dictates of Big Business than to any other influence, the Rooseveltians are seeking to gain their ends through that channel. Even Perkins and his associates in the Progressive camp are working along this line.

The hitch in the program at present is that Big Business has not declared for Roosevelt with any impressive unanimity. While it is taken for granted that the Standard Oil crowd wants the colonel, its opposing faction in Wall street, the Morgan crowd, is either split up or "playing its bets across the board." Morgan himself is for Hughes. Herbert L. Satterlee is for Roosevelt, and H. P. Davison of the Morgan firm is a Root boomer. The Morgan crowd, in a way customary to big business, seems to have scattered its support so as to enhance its chances of having a friend at court whichever way the nomination goes.

OLD GUARD NURSES HUGHES.

Unless Big Business, by a more unanimous effort, should bring the major portion of the Old Guard into line for Roosevelt the chances of the colonel winning the nomination will remain somewhat slim, at least so long as Hughes remains in the race. Just now the Old Guard is interested in nursing the Hughes boom along and doing nothing to induce the justice to withdraw.

The elimination of Hughes at any time with Roosevelt occupying the formidable position he has attained in the last fortnight would develop an overwhelming demand for the colonel. The Old Guard does not want to meet that overwhelming demand unless for reasons of its own it is ready to accept Roosevelt.

Says T. R. Misrepresented.

The anti-Roosevelt Republicans are waxing somewhat bitter in their efforts to put a crimp in the colonel's boom for the nomination. They have even gone so far as to take up the recent Democratic charge that Roosevelt had misrepresented the facts when he told the Methodist bishops that during his administration "not one American man, woman, or child was slain by representatives of any foreign government."

The original charge of misrepresentation, made by Senator Stone, chairman of the senate committee on foreign relations, was:

"Records show many instances when Americans were killed in Mexico during the time that Mr. Roosevelt was president of the United States. Also there are many records of persecution and imprisonment of Americans in Mexico during that time and at least one instance when Americans were forced to flee from the country and seek safety north of the Rio Grande.

"Claims against Mexico aggregating $450,000 were presented to the Porfirio Diaz government by Americans for indemnity for the killing of four citizens of this country and the injuries to one man at Cananea on June 19, 1905, during an uprising against Americans."

Roosevelt Replies to Charges.

Col. Roosevelt's reply to Senator Stone follows:

"Senator Stone says I stated 'that no Americans lost their lives on foreign soil through acts of foreigners' during my administration. Mr. Stone is mistaken. I said that 'no Americans were slain by representatives of any foreign nation.'

"Of course every year, everywhere, in every country, citizens of that country and occasional foreigners are killed by ordinary criminals, and this even in great civilized cities.

"When I was on the Little Missouri in the old days an Englishman was killed by Sioux Indians not far from me. When I was police commissioner a German was killed by gunmen near the Bowery. But Senator Stone would not in his more sober moments say that either the Sioux or the gunmen were representatives of the American government or the American people."

CINCINNATI.

A postcard canvass was made by the Enquirer of wards Four and Seven, large representative Republican wards, embracing all classes of voters, in Cincinnati. The Seventh contains a large percentage of German-Americans, a tenement house population, as well as a large number of small manufacturers, merchants, and shopkeepers. Probably no ward in Cincinnati possesses a more cosmopolitan population.

Approximately 2,000 voters were canvassed. The totals for all of the candidates follow:

	First choice.	Second choice.	Third choice.
Sherman	149	104	148
Roosevelt	444	68	131

CLEVELAND.

A poll of the three strongest Republican precincts in the Republican wards in Cleveland, each of which was carried by Roosevelt over Taft by a big margin four years ago, shows that the split in the Republican ranks has been largely closed up here. Roosevelt is still strong, running second in the poll to former Senator Burton, Ohio's favorite son. The poll was taken by the Cleveland Leader. Returns from 480 return post cards show this preference:

	First choice.	Second choice.	Third choice.
Burton	220	80	32
Cummins	0	4	28
Du Pont	0	4	8

GALESBURG.

The result of a straw vote the Evening Mail of Galesburg, Ill., took on first, second, and third choice for president shows that Roosevelt leads first and second places and ties with Sherman for third. The result is given below:

	First choice.	Second choice.	Third choice.
Sherman	22	9	12
Roosevelt	27	18	12
Root	4	7	7

TOPEKA.

A postal card poll of fifteen hundred representative Republicans, representing every county in Kansas, conducted by the Topeka Daily Capital resulted as follows:

Hughes, 606; Root, 193; Roosevelt, 179; Burton, 88; Cummins, 39; Fairbanks, 21; Weeks, 20; Sherman, 20; Capper, 11; Knox, 10; Borah, 9; Taft, 5; Brumbaugh, 2; Mann, 1; McCall, 1; Harding, 1; Hadley, 1; Ford, 1.

PRESIDENT APPROVES JAMES AS PERMANENT CHAIRMAN.

Wilson's Selection Will Place Kentucky Chairman at Head of Convention in St. Louis.

Washington, D. C., June 8.—President Wilson has approved the tentative selection of Senator Ollie James of Kentucky for permanent chairman of the Democratic convention at St. Louis. This assures the election of the senator by the convention.

As permanent chairman Senator James will be named to head the committee which will notify Mr. Wilson of his nomination, as he did after the Baltimore convention.

The president has not decided where he will receive the notification committee, although his supporters in New Jersey are anxious that he go to "Shadow Lawn," his summer home in that state, for the ceremony.

BRUMBAUGH'S DELEGATES START WAR ON PENROSE.

Charge Senator Is Not Telling Truth About Strength of the Governor in Pennsylvania.

Gov. Brumbaugh's Pennsylvania delegates didn't lose a minute after they reached Chicago yesterday in declaring war on Senator Boies Penrose. They said in plain English that Penrose is not telling the truth in his Chicago statements. They claim a majority of the Pennsylvania delegation for Brumbaugh; assert that his name will go before the convention, and that Penrose can have the national committeeship if he insists upon it.

The Brumbaugh headquarters started the first real fireworks along Candidates' Row. A formal statement says:

"Senator Penrose has blown into Chicago with the same line of bluff he has been trying to put up in Pennsylvania. He has come here with a claim that the Pennsylvania delegation is uninstructed and that he controls the delegation. It is not the fact and he knows it is not the fact, and so does every other person alive to the real political situation in the Keystone state.

"The facts in the case are these: There are seventy-six members of the Pennsylvania delegation. Thirty-seven of the district delegates and two delegates at large are pledged to support Gov. Martin G. Brumbaugh for the presidency."

GEORGIA TO ELECT JACKSON.

State Senator Pickett Says Present National Committeeman Will Be Chosen.

State Senator Roscoe Pickett, chairman of the Georgia state central committee, announced yesterday that Henry S. Jackson present national committeeman from Georgia, is slated for reëlection. The caucus will be held informally on Monday in the Victoria hotel. All the Georgia delegation is now in Chicago, Senator Pickett said.

THREE STATE DELEGATIONS TO ARRIVE HERE TODAY.

Idaho, Washington, and Maine Representatives Coming in Special Trains.

The Washington delegates will arrive on a special train at the Union station at noon, and three special cars carrying the remainder of the delegation will arrive at the Union station from Tacoma at 9.

'WHITE AND TAN' CONTEST STUMPS G. O. P. UMPIRES

National Committee Passes Louisiana Seat Feud Back to Delegates Themselves.

Louisiana, with its bitter contest between the "Lily Whites" and the "Black and Tans" over a delegation of twelve members stumped the Republican national committee last night, and the hostilities were passed back to the delegations themselves in the hope that they might be able to effect some compromise to settle their differences. Up to a late hour last night proposals and counter-proposals were being exchanged between the two factions, but no agreement had been reached.

Action by the national committee was expected yesterday morning. The committeeman sat until nearly midnight on Friday to hear evidence and arguments by both sides and then adjourned. When morning came the decision was postponed pending the settlement of contests in South Carolina, Oklahoma, and Missouri. These contests disposed of, the committee adjourned until Monday morning after postponing for a third time action on the "Lily White-Black and Tan" ruction.

Row Especially Bitter.

Contests between the "Lily Whites" and the "Black and Tans" have been the quadrennial feature of Republican conventions since 1880, but the row this year is an especially bitter one. The convention presided over by the Republican state chairman met in a New Orleans hotel from which, according to the "Black and Tans," all Negroes are barred arbitrarily. This convention elected the "Lily White" set of twelve delegates, but the "Black and Tans" held another convention and elected their own delegation. Both delegations came to Chicago with a squad of advisers and lawyers.

The "Lily Whites" went before the national committee with the declaration that the only salvation for the Republican party in the south is to remove from it the stain of Negro domination. In this way only, they said, can the "solid south" upon which the Democrats rely be broken. A number of Negroes, including ministers, educators, and lawyers, were present to support the "Lily White" leader, Armand Romain, in his argument that the best Negroes realize the truth of this assertion.

Negroes Barred at Hotel.

According to the "Black and Tans," there is no ground on which the convention held by the "Lily Whites" can be sustained. They say that by the very fact that the convention was held in a hotel barring Negroes the colored delegates were prevented from obtaining any recognition whatever in the affairs of Louisiana Republicans.

In considering the contest the committee found itself in an embarrassing position. It could decide against the "Lily Whites" and assure Democratic domination in the "solid south," according to the one faction, or it could decide against the "Black and Tans" and run the risk of alienating the Negro vote in the northern states. In the face of this problem the matter was sent back to the delegations with the request that they adjust their own differences to the satisfaction of all Louisiana Republicans. Late last night the "Black and Tans" announced the "Lily Whites" had offered them half the delegation, but asserted that the offer had been declined with the declaration that they demanded the seating of their entire delegation. The "Black and Tans" are claimed for Fairbanks.

Missouri Case Considered.

The Eleventh Missouri district was the first case considered. This was a local scrap in one of the St. Louis districts, with both sets of delegates uninstructed. A. C. Kunze and F. W. Breckman, contestants, were seated over Henry L. Weeke and Charles R. Graves. The committee vote was unanimous.

Two contests came from Oklahoma. The real issue involved was whether J. A. Harris, the present national committeeman, will succeed himself or whether James J. McGraw will be elected his successor. Two Harris delegates and two McGraw delegates were seated.

Harris Men Seated.

A. B. Wood and O. A. Mitscher, allied with the Harris faction, were declared the legally elected delegates in the Fifth district, and Myron E. Humphrey and William A. Mauer of the McGraw faction won in the Sixth district. Mr. Wood died at Wesley hospital before the result of the vote was announced, and his alternate, Amos Wing, will have his credentials.

The Seventh Texas district contest was dismissed without a hearing, the contestants withdrawing their claims. William H. Clifford and R. W. Humphreys were declared the regularly elected delegates.

In addition to the Louisiana differences, contests in four states and the District of Columbia still are to be decided. Of the sixty-two original contests nine were adjusted today and twenty-five cleared up in previous sessions.

RADICAL MOOSE START A REVOLT

Rebel Against Dickering by Perkins for Harmony with the G. O. P.

as they put it, swinging scores of delegates into line for him when the crucial test comes, as well as the force of popular sentiment they believe is behind T. R.

This is the influence that the old organization Republicans, the Progressive spokesmen pointed out, are looking at in their disposition to treat with the Roosevelt men on a get-together program. If they were to consider Roosevelt merely on the basis of the delegates he already has they would discard him at the outset, they said.

Sources of T. R. Strength.

But the possible strength of Roosevelt, developing in a stampede or when the smashup comes, augmented by the business men's influence and popular acclaim, and all important consideration of the election in November, the Moose leaders assert, are elements of great strength that the old guardsmen wing of the Republicans do not desire to ignore at this time.

That is why they, as well as the "favorite son" managers, say the Moose men, are willing now to talk compromise and to consider Roosevelt seriously with a possibility of naming him in the Republican convention.

At any rate, this is the view that is entertained by Mr. Perkins and his confidential men, and they were as certain as ever yesterday that the race now lies between T. R. and Hughes, with T. R. in the lead in diagraming the "obvious thing to do."

B. F. Harris, the Champaign banker, issued a statement in explanation of the reason for the swinging into line of the commercial interests for T. R.

"It seems to me," he said, "that it ought to be said that it is a new and great thing to see so many of the big, conspicuous business men of the nation come out openly in an all-American and businesslike way for a candidate for president who is head and shoulders above all other candidates.

"Of course, the crisis at which this nation stands is responsible for their coming out and not any partisan or selfish motives.

"We have got to the point now where we must separate the goats from the sheep, and so it is one of the finest signs of the times to see many of our most public spirited citizens come out in this critical hour and frankly take their stand in the movement led by J. Ogden Armour and George von L. Meyer favoring the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt."

Perkins Pleased by Situation.

Mr. Perkins, at the close of several informal conferences with representatives of the old organization Republicans, said the situation is working out well as can be expected at this time. He intimated that the Progressive party national committee at its meeting tomorrow will issue another statement, outlining a compromise offer to Republicans, based on the assumption that Roosevelt is by all odds the first man to consider in any get together agreement.

"There have been a number of conferences," said Mr. Perkins, "between the Republican and Progressive leaders, but nothing definite has been accomplished. It is too early to hope for anything definite at this time, as only a small percentage of the delegates to the Republican convention are in the city.

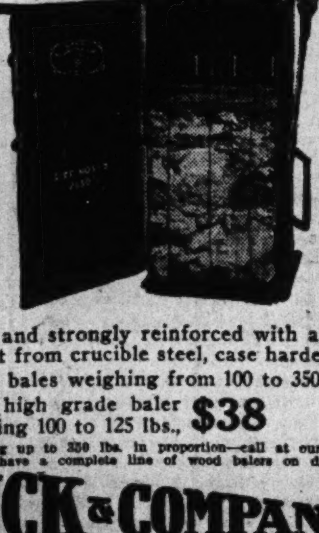
"We are for Roosevelt to the end, and insist he should be nominated. Our position today is just what it was last January when the call for the Progressive national convention was called. We are willing to meet Republicans half way in the interest of harmony. And we repeat that harmony is not necessarily predicated on the nomination of Roosevelt."

The Moose leaders laid down on Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania late in the day, offering him, in so far as they were able to speak with authority, the chairmanship of the national committee this year if he would swing the Pennsylvania delegation to Roosevelt.

Alexander Moore of Pittsburgh made the offer on his own responsibility. Following the conference Mr. Moore stated that while he could not speak for Mr. Roosevelt, he believed T. R. would not object to such an arrangement.

High Grade All-Steel Waste Paper Baler
The Kind Used in United States Post Offices

A strictly fireproof and sanitary baler—the simplest on the market—made so as to give the maximum of efficiency and strength. Its steel construction makes it an entirely safe depository for waste paper—there is no danger from fire and no chance for filth to accumulate. The leverage is so powerful that a very small pressure applied by the operator gives a very great pressure on the paper—making a full weight bale that is clean and will stand up well under shipment. The hopper is convenient to fill, and the full opening side-swing door makes the completed bale easy to remove. This baler is especially desirable where space is limited, as the floor space occupied is very small.



Built from heavy sheets of steel and strongly reinforced with angle steel bars. All working parts cast from crucible steel, case hardened. Made in several sizes to produce bales weighing from 100 to 350 lbs.

PRICES: A splendid, high grade baler producing a bale weighing 100 to 125 lbs., $38

Prices of other sizes, producing bales weighing up to 350 lbs. in proportion—call at our store or phone for further information. We also have a complete line of wood balers on display.

FERDINAND FLIEGNER, 72 years old, a retired furniture dealer of Chicago and a native of Posen, Germany, died yesterday. Until the last he had kept up with the latest war reports and was anxiously awaiting the cessation of hostilities that he might make his accustomed yearly visit to the "old country." Mr. Fliegner is survived by a son, Charles Fliegner, of 2819 Logan boulevard.

JOHN BRADY, a pioneer in the building of steel bridges, died at the age of 81 yesterday. Mr. Brady was born in Lindsay, Ontario, Canada, and came to Chicago in 1866. He lived at 4905 Vincennes avenue, and is survived by a son, J. A. Brady and two daughters, Mrs. T. J. Fitzpatrick and Miss Minnie Brady. Mr. Brady superintended the construction of the first steel bridges in this and other states.

CHARLES I. PARKER principal of the Bowen South Chicago High school, who died at his home, 1326 Seventy-first place, last Wednesday, will be buried Sunday. Services will be held in the Bowen High school at 2 p. m. At the request of the high school pupils and the community, the body will lie in state at Bowen High school from 12 to 2 o'clock.

CO-EDS TO GIVE MASQUE ON CAMPUS TOMORROW.

"The Gift" Will Be First of Ceremonies Marking Completion of New Woman's Building.

Just as the Law building cuts off the rays of the setting sun from the Women's quadrangle tomorrow evening the women of the University of Chicago will begin the presentation of a dedicatory masque, "The Gift," by Miss Lucine Finch, to celebrate the progress of women in universities, and especially in the University of Chicago. The masque is the first of the ceremonies in connection with the opening of Ida Noyes hall.

The stage will be the greensward, with the ivy clad walls of the Law building the background. One hundred women, representing the "Sun," "Moon," "Harvesters," "Spirit of the Lake," "Spirit of the Drama," and "Service in the City," and other conceptions, will be the actors. Three members of the faculty have the speaking parts.

More men than women received the Phi Beta Kappa key this year. The list follows:

RESCUERS FIND NINE BODIES OF PACKARD WRECK VICTIMS

Four Persons Known to Be Missing —Three of the Dead Found Down Stream from Crash Scene.

Greene, Ia., June 3.—Rescue work at the Packard wreck has resulted in the finding of nine bodies, eight of which have been identified. Four are known to be missing.

The known missing are: Mrs. Frances Christeianson, Wesley, Ia.; Harry Farrell, Louisville, Ky.; Pearl Robinson, 14, Sterling, Ill., and Mrs. Williams, address unknown.

Three bodies were found this afternoon downstream from where the wreck occurred Friday morning.

Searchers are devoting all of their time in dragging the creek and searching along the banks, believing that no more bodies will be found in the partially submerged coach. Many injured persons are being given treatment in local hospitals.

POWDER IN SHOES AS WELL AS GUNS

Foot=Ease to Be Added to Equipment of Hospital Corps at Fort Wayne.

Under the above heading the Detroit Free Press, among other things says: "The theory is that soldiers whose feet are in good condition can walk further and faster than soldiers who have corns and bunions incased in rawhide.

The Government's foot powder order is regarded as the last word in the scientific outfitting of the defenders of the flag."

The English, French and Allied Troops constantly make use of Allen's Foot-Ease. It takes the friction from the shoe and rests the feet. Foot Powder, shaken into the shoes of soldiers, has long been in use in the German army, and Uncle Sam's adoption of this form of treating and easing the feet, emphasizes the testimony of the millions of people the world over, who are shaking Allen's Foot-Ease, the antiseptic powder, into their shoes, and using it in the foot bath, as the only practical and lasting treatment to ease and prevent sore feet. TWO YEARS

For two years the Eight Cylinder V-Type Motor Cadillac has stood as an engineering achievement without an equal.

For two years most of the best engineering talent in the industry has been striving to produce the equal of the Cadillac.

For two years there has been much proclaiming of marvelous new cars to come—cars whose performance would excel anything.

For two years some forty followers of the Cadillac have been "catching up," and their cars are now in the hands of the public.

And after two years of all this the Cadillac today stands higher as an achievement than ever before. The equal of the Cadillac motor has yet to be designed. The equal of the Cadillac performance has yet to be demonstrated.

After these two years Cadillac engineering genius stands revealed as never before. It has produced a car of such refined action and such sturdy construction that 300,000,000 car miles of use have failed to locate a weakness or suggest a change.

After two years, advanced design—high grade construction—proved correctness—the three essentials of motor car satisfaction, are still found only in the Cadillac. It is the certainly safe car to buy.

"Our Country! In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong."
—Stephen Decatur.

THE PEOPLE FOR DEFENSE; CONGRESS AGAINST IT.

It is a pity the tremendous demonstration on behalf of national defense which filled all yesterday with the thunder of cheers and shook the city with the tread of a mighty host could not have taken place before the capitol.

There are too many gentlemen in that historic edifice who have not yet waked up to the nation's mood or responded to the spirit of the American people at this time.

On Friday the Democratic majority of the house of representatives, aided by renegade Republicans, voted to keep the navy in the fourth place. A few weeks ago the same organized majority, also with the aid of Republican votes, defeated the recommendations of the military experts and forced compromises which will leave the nation without proper land forces for several years.

The course of the Sixty-fourth congress in the midst of imminent international perils and in the face of a steadily growing demand for defense has been a scandalous exhibition of irresponsible petty politics, irresolution, and ignorance. The magnificent defense demonstrations, of which yesterday's in Chicago was the greatest, are but the first wave of the nation's feeling. In November there will be another demonstration and when it is over there will be new men in the seats of power at Washington.

The responsibility for the failure of adequate defense legislation lies with the Democratic party organization. But individual Republicans share it, and we are ashamed to find that most of them come from the middle west. The expert recommendations for the army were defeated with the help of the following Illinois representatives: M. D. Foster, Frank Buchanan, H. T. Rainey, A. J. Sabath, W. Elza Williams, and Clyde Tavenner, Democrats, and J. C. McKenzie, W. A. Rodenberg, T. S. Williams, and J. A. Sterling, Republicans.

The vote for a fourth place navy, we are glad to say, included no Republicans from Illinois, while the Illinois Democrats, Gallagher, McAndrews, McDermott, and Stone, honored themselves by voting for the second place navy.

The American people are awake. They will no longer tolerate the selfish indifference and evasions of the politicians who, confronted by a national emergency, have failed to think and failed to act for their country.

REPUBLICAN LEADERSHIP.

The Republican leaders in the convention of 1916 bear upon their shoulders a heavier responsibility to their party and their country than any of their predecessors since the founders.

It is a responsibility which ought to rouse every impulse of patriotism and to purge their deliberations of the more selfish temptations of power and ambition.

For the convention of 1916 must be a convention of reunion, a convention of constructive policy, a convention which will restore the Republican party to the function it performed for over one-half a century as the great political agency of American progress.

The nation is drifting in perilous waters. It dare not continue to drift. It dare not submit itself longer to the pilotage of a visionary and vacillating government. If it is to avoid disaster it must have firm, far seeing, and courageous direction, and its hope of that will be established or quenched in Chicago this week.

The nation calls for high and resolute leadership and the Republican leaders now assembling must create it. They are men, we are confident, who sincerely love their country and are capable of working wholeheartedly for her good. Now is the opportunity to serve her by placing personal and factional advantages away and by striving honestly and earnestly for a strong program and a strong man to carry it forward.

If real patriotism rules the Republican leadership and the Progressive leadership a candidate will be chosen without the infliction of wounds that will weaken him or his cause in the battle he is to lead. There is no excuse for an internecine war. A fair and friendly contest for the nomination is not only desirable; it is imperative. The party should be able to command all its real leaders and all its resources in the campaign, for we seek and expect not only bare success, but a victory so sweeping as to insure an inspiring and lasting impulse for carrying forward the great constructive program which will secure the safety of the nation and its expanding prosperity throughout the critical years through which we are to pass.

The spirit of the convention of 1916 should be worthy of a great epoch, worthy of the Republican party in the days when its vision and its devotion saved the republic, worthy of a great past, a great present, a great future.

WOMEN AND COURAGE.

The men of a nation seldom will arise much above the standard of courage and unselfishness set for them by the women of the nation. Spartan soldiers did not leave Lesbian wives and mothers behind them, and Roman republican legionaries did not march out with their women running after them weeping and imploring them to remain at home.

If the women of the nation are weak, selfish, and timid, the men will reflect feminine attributes. A comfortable householder objects violently enough to being taken from safe pursuits and easy circumstances. His conscience might command him, but if the women of his household emphasize the characteristics from which he is trying to escape he is likely to accept ignominy and avoid danger.

A noble minded womanhood can make a courageous manhood not only possible but anything else than a courageous manhood utterly impossible. It is an unusual craven who can withstand the scorn of a woman's contempt for his lack of courage. The instinct of the male is to be esteemed brave by the female. It hardly matters how many generations of soft living have tended to break down the courageous impulses and hard muscles, the scorn of a woman will revive determination to be a man in a man's part.

If women reconcile themselves to soft living and cowardice, to selfishness and timidity, they will make the men in character what they want them to be in condition. The character is not handsome even if the condition be comfortable.

A nation of good men is a nation of courageous women. It is that or it is a nation of unconsidered women. Women either are rejected from the scheme of the nation for other than breeding purposes, or, being respected as thinking, influential parts of it, they affect its character.

It is possible for male children to be born in the harem and have manly attributes when they are grown, regardless of feminine influence. That is because the man takes the boy's training in hand and disregards the woman. What she thinks or is becomes of no consequence. In a rightly ordered nation the woman will set the standard of behavior. She will give either courage or cowardice.

THE JUDICIAL ELECTION.

It is hoped public preoccupation with national politics will not cause a light vote in the judicial election tomorrow. The selection of seven judges is an important duty and ought to be carefully performed. A light vote may mean a politicians' vote rather than a vote of thinking citizens, and the results be more advantageous to professional partisanship than to the courts and the public.

THE TRIBUNE urges the reëlection of the following sitting judges: Martin M. Gridley, Charles A. McDonald, William E. Dever, and Richard E. Burke. All of these men are Democrats, and some, perhaps, would not be considered as desirable judicial timber as the best of the contestants, if all were coming up for election the first time.

But the preference, if any, is not important enough to outweigh the considerations favoring the return of honest and competent men. The elective system has serious defects, which ought to be diminished as much as possible in practice. The chief of these is instability of tenure of office. We cannot hope for the right quality of judges if incumbents are constantly being turned out in spite of their service. Not only do frequent changes weaken the morale of the judiciary, but they throw away the benefits of judicial experience and break continuity of decision.

Every judge who is industrious, honest, and competent should be encouraged to feel that his place is virtually permanent by the will of the people. Only by firmly establishing a preference for fit incumbents over new contestants can we give the confidence and stability which are a necessary basis for a responsible judiciary.

The cases of two sitting judges call for special discussion. Judge Robert E. Turney has been put out of respectful consideration by a signed appeal for votes addressed to jurors he has excused from service. Judge Turney explains that this appeal was sent out by his bailiff without his knowledge, but even this would indicate an omission of duty to oversee the methods employed on his behalf, which hardly can be condoned. The fact remains that a most improper and demoralizing method has been employed to bring about Judge Turney's reëlection, and voters should rebuke it.

In place of Judge Turney and Judge William Fenimore Cooper, whose legal capacity is doubted by lawyers of standing, voters would do well to prefer two candidates of proved fitness, former Judge George A. Dupuy and Municipal Judge Hosea Wells.

By voting for Mr. Dupuy and Judge Wells the principles advanced in favor of sitting judges are in essence observed. Mr. Dupuy has served with credit on the bench and was defeated in a general election, a Democratic landslide, which did not discriminate as to fitness of judicial candidates. By reëlecting him, judicial experience will not be wasted, as in the case of the election of a new contestant, and the bench will be strengthened by the addition of a capable judge in place of an incapable one.

In the case of Judge Hosea Wells, a deserved promotion will be accomplished, and the principle of retaining fit and experienced men subserved. Judge Wells has experience and proved capacity.

Special emphasis also may be given to the case of Judge Gridley. Judge Gridley has been assigned of late to the Appellate court, where he has given excellent service. But appellate work breaks a judge's personal contact with the public and even with lawyers and in some degree handicaps him in an election. This ought not to be in any case, but especially not where so able a man as Judge Gridley is concerned. Voters should keep this in mind and see that Judge Gridley's service in the Appellate court does not injure him at the polls. He should be returned without fail.

One candidacy is for the uncompleted term of Judge Freeman, resigned. For this place the Bar association preference is Andrew J. Redmond.

Editorial of the Day.

WHY FARMERS ARE CONSERVATIVE.

[From the Breeders' Gazette.]

At a recent meeting of city business men who are chiefly manufacturers one of the speakers wished to know why farmers are ultraconservative. Since there were no real, working farmers present, his question was not answered, although it was discussed at length.

Those who know farming as a practical farmer knows it do not require an explanation of his so-called conservatism. After a farmer has lived and worked through a dozen years of drouths, floods, freezes, animal disease epidemics, wind storms, hail storms, insect depredations, low price periods, and many other related adversities he naturally concludes that his is a vocation in which caution and conservatism are enjoined. He begins to understand that to count ducks before they hatch is amusing nonsense. He does not count them after they are hatched; he waits until they are grown, cooped or dressed and sold.

A manufacturer employing 200 men in producing a given article knows that in a given time the output of his factory will be a given number of tons, worth a certain price. Although a few factors involved at times may make it impossible for him accurately to estimate final net returns, he can easily get at approximate results. It is altogether different in a farmer's case. When he plants fifty acres of corn he does not know whether the yield will be so many bushels per acre or merely stover. If he lives in a region in which corn has never been a failure he can of course count upon a yield, but he cannot predict the measure of it. Even when a farmer does everything that within reason could be done to insure profitable yields of the crops which he is accustomed to grow he knows from experience that it is folly to count bushels or tons until they have been saved and cashed.

The fact is that if a farmer is not conservative he is either crazy or a simpleton. And yet if he owns his land, and continues to do the best that he nnows, he is sure of a living; which is more than can be said of the average city man.

LA MARQUISE DE FONTENOY

[Copyright: 1916: By the Brentwood Company.]

FOR hundreds of years the washing of the feet of twelve poor old men by the emperor has constituted a picturesque and solemn ceremony on Thursday of Holy Week at the court of Vienna, in pious memory of the washing of the feet of his twelve disciples by the Founder of Christianity on that day.

As long as Empress Elizabeth was alive and took part in any court function she would on the same day wash the feet of twelve aged women.

This year, however, the time honored ceremony was entirely abandoned, the emperor's physicians being unwilling to permit him to be subjected to the fatigue of any such state function, entailing the going down on his knees before each of the twelve old men; and it is understood that the feet washing ceremony will never be revived and is definitely abolished as an anachronistic survival of ancient days.

As in the case of the Court of St. James, where the annual feet washing ceremony on Holy Thursday has been suspended since the reign of James II., the event will be commemorated by the bestowal of the customary gifts of the sovereign upon the twelve old men and twelve old women. In England it is known as the King's Maundy.

Gen. Sir Alfred Turner of the English army, who since the beginning of the war has been particularly virulent in his criticisms of the kaiser and his leading generals, with most of whom he has been personally acquainted by reason of his having repeatedly attended the annual grand maneuvers of the German army in behalf of the British war department, has recently raised his voice in behalf of Gen. Maurice von Bissing, governor general of Belgium.

Von Bissing ever since the shooting of the English Red Cross nurse, Miss Edith Cavell, at Brussels by a file of German soldiers has been held accountable in the eyes of the civilized world for that execution.

Gen. Turner, however, has produced evidence to show that Von Bissing was quite innocent in the matter and that the Teuton official at fault was Gen. von Krachnitz, the military governor of Brussels, who was quite independent of Governor General von Bissing in the affair and from whom no appeal to Bissing could be made.

Sir Alfred Turner, while admitting that Gen. von Bissing is a strict disciplinarian, insists that he is one of the most chivalrous and smartest officers of the German army, possessed of remarkable independence of character, which on one memorable occasion landed him in the black books of the kaiser.

It occurred during the annual maneuvers, when the emperor insisted on changing places with him, deputing him to act as umpire in chief and assuming in lieu thereof the command of the Von Bissing army corps. The kaiser carried out his usual spectacular displays, hurling masses of infantry and even cavalry against unshaken and impregnable positions.

When the officers were assembled at the close of the day around the umpire in chief for the critique of the operations the kaiser pushed forward and began to give his opinion of the proceedings to Gen. von Bissing, who almost paralyzed those present by coolly interrupting William, waving him back with his hand and with the words, "Keine Einmischung, Majestät!" (No interference, your majesty.)

The emperor shut up like a clam in the middle of a sentence, and fell back, with a face as black as thunder, which was not improved by the cutting censure administered to him by Von Bissing as umpire in chief for the manner in which he had made his attack that would have entailed a holocaust in real warfare.

Three days later Von Bissing was suddenly relieved by the emperor of his command and placed on the retired list.

Being a man of strong character and of independent fortune, Von Bissing openly rebelled against so gross an act of injustice, and a campaign took place against the kaiser and against the latter's private military cabinet which found its echo in the reichstag.

This led the emperor to endeavor to make amends by bestowing upon Von Bissing the Order of the Black Eagle, which was the equivalent of the British Order of the Garter. But Von Bissing remained unemployed until the beginning of the war, when he was appointed military governor of Cologne and afterwards governor general of Belgium, in succession to the late Field Marshal Count von der Goltz.

It is a curious fact, indeed, that nearly all the generals who have acquired note during the present war had been shelved prior thereto in consequence of having incurred the displeasure of the kaiser by their independence toward him in times of peace, another instance being that of Field Marshal von Hindenburg, while Field Marshal von Mackensen was a particular bête noire of the German crown prince, for whose military qualities he manifested the disdain of a true soldier.

Governor General von Bissing's half brother, Baron Walter von Bissing, has been a resident of England for thirty-six years or more, and secured letters of naturalization as a British subject some fifteen years ago.

Both his former wife, now dead, who was a Miss Marion Austen, and his present wife, who was a Miss Charlotte Sparling, were both entirely English, while his children have been brought up as English children. He is totally English in sentiment, has never belonged to any German clubs or societies in England, and has never seen the kaiser, much less received any order from him.

Yet owing to the prominence of his name in connection with his half brother's activities as governor general of Belgium, the English authorities have been forced, very reluctantly, by excited popular sentiment to give orders for his internment during the war, his captivity being, however, made as light as possible.

As for Gen. Sir Alfred Turner, he belongs to a well known legal family, his granduncle, Sir George Turner, having been lord chief justice. He is quite rich, having among other things benefited to the tune of half a million dollars under the will of his wife's uncle, Noel Whiting of Battersea Sweep.

DIRT IN THE AIR.

IT is impossible wholly to escape breathing impure air. The British committee for the investigation of atmospheric pollution reported that the average atmosphere deposits about fifteen tons of solid matter a month during the winter on each square kilometer, about 250 acres. This is at the rate of about two pounds a month on a small city lot. This is divided into one-sixth ton of tarry matter or soot, three tons of wood and coal dust, six tons of dirt and earth dust, three tons of sulphuric acid, a ton of chlorins, and one-third of a ton of ammonia.

This is the amount of dirt which falls out of the air. In order to find out how much dust the air contains we must add what stays suspended to the above amounts.

Similar studies have been made in Boston, New York, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, Chicago, and other American cities. The outside air is very dirty except in the mountains and by the seashore. Unquestionably the general dirtiness of the outside air is responsible for some ill health. But at that, outside air is the best air we have. As bad as it is those who get the most of it are the best off, for inside air is worse. Inside air is not so frequently purified by sunlight. Electricity has a better chance to purify outside air. Winds help and so do rains and snows.

Added to its other shortcomings is the great amount and the harmful quality of the dust in the air which some people are forced to breathe. Certain workingmen breathe air which materially lessens their life expectancy.

In order to get some information as to the danger to men who work at certain trades, Dr. W. C. Baker studied the records of patients at the council university dispensary.

BARBERS. Working as a barber is not supposed to be a very hazardous occupation and it is not, but there are certain dangers which are important and which at the same time are unnecessary. Barbers work long hours indoors. They stand. Their work is especially fatiguing on the feet and hands. The air of a barber shop is dusty. The dust is composed in great part of short hairs. Much of the fine hair is breathed. Of the 110 barbers treated in this clinic, 12 had consumption, 6 chronic bronchitis, 7 emphysema, 2 asthma (emphysema and asthma cause difficult breathing), 9 acute bronchitis, and 4 chronic pharyngitis.

This is a heavy toll paid to diseases of the lungs and upper air passages. The reason is breathing of air rich in dust and especially in hair. As the result of long hours, indoor life, standing at the chair, many suffered from constipation or some other form of stomach or bowel trouble.

Over 10 per cent had consumption. What is to be done about it? A vacuum cleaner would be a very good attachment to a barber shop. Hair should not be allowed on the floor. If a vacuum cleaner is not possible, cleaning with a damp cloth should be frequently done. The electric fans can be so placed as not to stir up the hair on the floor. Barbers have a habit of shaking the cloth one or more times during the course of a hair cut. This fills the air with hair. The habit should be discontinued. If the zone around the chair could be covered with a rug or some composition cork matting it would save the feet some tire.

FURRIERS—Of the sixty-nine furriers who came to the clinic nine had consumption, twelve chronic bronchitis, ten emphysema, and two asthma—forty-two had some kind of disease of the lungs. For this great preponderance of disease of the lungs there are several causes. The air of the shop is generally dirty. In the dirt is a large amount of hair. One process in handling furs is beating. This fills the air with hair. Another is clipping. The air is dry and warm and this increases the tendency of dust to float. In certain processes the workers are in contact with aniline dyes and in others with mercury.

The remedy is as follows: Beating should be done in a room away from the general workshop. Dust should not be allowed to accumulate. Vacuum cleaners should be used. Where it is not feasible to use a vacuum cleaner the floors and tables should be sprinkled before being swept or else some floor compounds should be used. Sweeping and cleaning should be done after the day's work has been finished and the furriers have left. If the air of the room cannot be kept clean the workingmen should wear respirators.

Thompson quotes the registrar general's (Great Britain) report as saying that in the past decade the consumption mortality among hatters is 50 per cent above the average. One reason for this, according to Stickler, is the laceration of the lungs by sharp, fine hair dust.

Furriers suffer also from eczema of the hands. Sometimes this can be prevented by wearing rubber gloves. Furriers and, in greater measure, hatters suffer from mercury poisoning. There should be basins of sulphur water or dilute aluminum acetate solution for washing the hands and face.

BAKERS—Of 130 bakers coming to this clinic 11 had consumption, 7 chronic bronchitis, 11 emphysema, 1 asthma, 9 acute bronchitis, 2 chronic pharyngitis, 5 acute pharyngitis, and 8 dry pleurisy—a total of 54.

The old time baker worked in an illy ventilated, hot, dusty, dirty floored, underground workshop. In recent years there has been great improvement. Mr. Ball, chief of the sanitary bureau of the Chicago health department, says that The people in Biloxi boast of the good bread made in their town in clean, sunny, flyproof, above ground bakeries. The air of the bakery must be kept hot while the sponge is rising. During the baking process it is difficult to keep the room cool. The air always contains flour dust. The tendency to accumulate bags, boxes, cans, and other litter is very strong around a bakery. The hours are long. In small establishments men work hard mixing and kneading, then they rest while the sponge rises, and finally they work hard and in heated air while the baking is going on.

The remedy? Bakeries should be above ground. This is necessary to permit of sunshine and air. Where the light is very good bags, boxes, and dust are not so likely to accumulate. To keep the temperature within bounds a bakery should be well ventilated. It ought to be possible to have a room for the sponge to rise in that the workers may not have to remain in air at so high a temperature except when absolutely necessary. Plenty of fresh air will hold down the temperature of the bakeroom. Great cleanliness will lessen the amount of dust in the air. The floors, benches, and walls should be vacuum cleaned or moistswept after working hours.

TOBACCO WORKERS—Of the 125 tobacco workers coming to this clinic eleven had consumption, four had chronic bronchitis, 3 emphysema, nine had acute bronchitis, six had acute pharyngitis, and one pleurisy with effusion—a total of thirty-eight.

As working in tobacco disturbs the digestion, we note that thirty of these patients had trouble with their digestions. As tobacco is a nerve poison, ten patients had neurasthenia, five had headaches, one acute nicotine poisoning, and one tobacco heart. Of the 125, ninety-eight were cigarmakers, nineteen cigaret makers, and fourteen tobacco handlers.

Investigators in European factories have found the air of tobacco factories very dusty. The air nine feet above the floor is much richer in dust than is the air of the street. Sweepings from a tobacco factory contain 7 per cent nicotine.

There is plenty of dust in the work of strippers, handlers, and rollers. The only part of a cigar which is moist when handled is the binder and wrapper.

Thompson tells us that 24 per cent of the deaths in 1905 among the cigarmakers' union were due to tuberculosis. Sommerfeld says that the consumption death rate among tobacco workers is twice the general tuberculosis rate.

There is no special reason why the tobacco trade should be a dusty trade. The floors should be kept clean, scrap should not be allowed to accumulate. The floors and tables should be vacuum cleaned. Suction fans should be made use of. There should be convenient and attractive washing facilities.

MARBLE CUTTERS.—Nineteen marble cutters were cared for in the clinic. Of these 3 had consumption, 2 emphysema, 1 dry pleurisy and 2 acute bronchitis, a total of 8.

Marble cutting has long been recognized as one of the dusty trades. In every list of occupations with a high consumption rate marble cutters rank near the top. Every process of marble working produces dust. Even wet polishing is likely to produce dust. The powder which dries where the water evaporates is easily turned into dust. The last fine polishing done with felt and tin oxide adds organic fibre and tin dust to the stone dust. ganic fiber and tin dust to the stone dust. Fine material should be removed as soon as possible. Respirators should be worn.

STONE CUTTERS—Of the 37 stone cutters coming to the clinic, 3 had consumption, 3 emphysema, 1 each chronic bronchitis, chalicosis [or hardening of the lung due to stone dust], acute bronchitis, acute pharyngitis and acute laryngitis.

Thompson says: "In general, the tuberculosis mortality among stone and marble cutters and carvers is five times greater than among farmers or lumbermen.

"The remedy consists in keeping the dust down. This can be done by properly controlling moistening of the field of work in procedures to which it is adapted. Dirt, dust and fine material should not be allowed to accumulate.

PLASTERERS—Of the 36 plasterers who applied to the dispensary for treatment, 3 had consumption, 3 chronic bronchitis, 2 emphysema, 2 acute bronchitis, 3 dry pleurisy and 1 acute pharyngitis.

Plasterers breathe air containing lime, sand and hair. They are exposed to cold and dampness.

Prevention: Workmen engaged in tearing down old plaster, especially in confined spaces, should wear respirators. Thompson says prevention consists in shielding the workmen as much as possible from inclement weather and cold, damp, indoor air. Masons should stand upon lattice frames to keep the feet dry. Dry material should be kept wet down.

In the opinion of Dr. Baker, not only should the employer do everything possible to protect the workers engaged in dusty trades but also the unions have duties to discharge. The unions should teach their members the dangers of dusty trades and methods for their control. Among other things, the men should know that a physical examination twice a year is advisable; that coughs and colds should not be treated with patent medicines. The importance of fresh air and cleanliness in the home should be insisted upon.

HOW MUCH TO DRINK.

A. C. F. writes: "I have been following the "eat and grow thin" diet for three months and with considerable success. Now summer comes on and I want to know when is the best time of day to drink and how much. The book is silent as to that point, but tells when not to drink."

REPLY.

The amount of water needed varies with the weather. Generally speaking, a man requires eighty ounces of water a day. Part of this a man gets incorporated in his food. He should drink about forty-eight ounces a day. This includes the water which he takes as coffee, tea or milk. An ordinary water glass holds six ounces. A very good plan is to take one glass of water during the work hours of the forenoon and another during the afternoon. This would leave six glasses to be taken just before and just after meals, or two glasses to a meal.

I advocate water with meals. It is probable that you have been told that drinking water with the meals tends to obesity. I do not think so, but if you are following a plan based on that theory increase the amount of water you take before breakfast and between meals.

PRUNES AND BRAN.

Mrs. K. M., who was recently quoted as saying that prunes and bran would fatten a person, contributes the following details:

"A half hour before each meal drink three glasses of cold water. A smaller person need take only two. At breakfast take one-third cup of wheat bran. Use it as a cereal, eating it with sugar and milk if so desired. When eating the bran eat as many prunes as you wish. As to other diet eat what you please. This will cure constipation.

"When my husband began this diet he weighed 152. He gained a half pound a week every week until he reached 176. He is perfectly well now. When he began he thought he was about to die."

CONSENT OF PROPERTY OWNERS NEEDED.

Chicago, May 30.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Can a four compartment garage in the rear of a vacant lot be erected and rented without the consent of owners of certain abutting property

I. J. PENNINGTON, 7241 Harvard avenue.

We accordingly wish to advise that from the facts submitted we conclude that the garage in question is of a public, rather than a private, nature, and as such becomes amenable to section 2,684 of the Chicago code of 1911, as amended July 17, 1911, page 962 of the council journal proceedings of 1911-'12, which provides as follows: "Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to locate, build, construct or maintain any garage within 200 feet of any building used as and for a hospital, church or public or parochial school, or the grounds thereof, and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to locate, build, construct or maintain any garage in the city in any block in which two-thirds of the buildings on both sides of the street are used exclusively for residence purposes, or within 100 feet of any such street in any such block, without securing the written consent of a majority of the property owners according to frontage on both sides of the street as provided by the ordinances of the city of Chicago."

From such it is to be seen the frontage consents are necessary in order to obtain a license for the conducting of such garage, and if the same is being conducted at the present time without a license it is in violation of the ordinances of the city of Chicago.

WATER PIPES IN ELIZABETH STREET.

Chicago, May 30.—[To the Friend of the People.]—When will water pipes be laid in Elizabeth street, between Eighty-third and Eighty-fourth streets? There are four houses in the block now, and we find it pretty inconvenient to carry water from our neighbors for household use.

A. JOHNSON, 8347 Elizabeth street.

A number of surveys have been made on this street, but none of them shows sufficient revenue to warrant the laying of a water main. The revenue required by ordinance is 6 cents per foot.

H. L. WEEKS,
Superintendent Water Pipe Extension.

COMMON LAW WOULD IMPOSE PENALTY.

Chicago, May 29.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Kindly advise me what the Illinois statutes are in regard to the following, taken from the New York laws: "Any person who finds lost property under circumstances which give him knowledge or means of inquiry as to the true owner and who appropriates such property to his own use, or to the use of another person who is not entitled thereto, without having first made every reasonable effort to find the owner and restore the property to him, is guilty of larceny."—New York state penal law.

H. J. P.

There is no statute in Illinois covering this point. The common law, which is in force in Illinois, would, however, impose the same penalty.

MAY BE DIVORCED FROM THIEF.

Chicago, May 29.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Please tell me if I can get a divorce from my husband, who is a well known thief and robber. We have children and I come from a very respectable family. If I tell him to clear his name he calls me the lowest names possible. Can my father sue my husband for the money he gave to my children, which my husband took away?

L. B.

1. You can get a divorce if husband has been convicted of robbery or any other felony. 2. No.

PAWNBROKERS' INTEREST CHARGE IN ILLINOIS.

Hannibal, Mo., May 26.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I had occasion to pawn a watch. I was allowed $4 on it. In ninety days I came after it and I was informed it would cost me $7 to get it. Is any such rate allowed?

MILLS.

In Illinois licensed pawnbrokers may charge 3 per cent per month. Offer that much money and demand your watch. If refused, sue.

PUNISH PORCINE POLITICIANS.

Madison, Wis., May 30.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Start an exposure of the men who vote on all pork barrel measures. Publish their names in bold face type on the front page. Hold them up to the public judgment as either Americans or traitors. We have had enough of this farce. This country is too big and stands for a form of government which must and shall be maintained. And to maintain it we must eliminate the un-American congressman, and eliminate him quick.

These words are radical because the time has come for radical action. We have had enough of the soft stuff that has emanated from Washington in the past. The time for "pussyfooting" is at an end. In times like these conservatism is a crime, especially when conservatism means the endangering of our country, the price paid for which is too sacred in the hearts of true Americans to have it flaunted as being negligible by cheap politicians who are Americans in name only.

S. L. BRINK.

PERSONAL AND NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS.

Chicago, June 1.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I notice that Mr. Ford appreciates the value of forty years of preparation for the attainment of success in one's own achievements, but fails to appreciate the need of any preparation to protect the industries, homes, and institutions so established.

GEORGE F. WHITEHOUSE.

PREPAREDNESS AND FOREIGN POLICY.

Agricultural College, N. D., May 31.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—In answer to your request for opinions concerning military service and preparedness, permit me to say that I am heartily in favor of universal military service on a plan similar to that of the Swiss, but I would require that along with the adoption of universal military service we undertake a radical amendment of the constitution of the United States. This amendment should make of a cabinet that is the creature of the president a ministry that is responsible to the people.

So long as the president has the prerogative to prevent the people, through their representatives, from taking steps that would lessen the danger of war, you will not find a great deal of enthusiasm for military service. Mr. Wilson, by insisting that it is his sole prerogative to walk without a balancing-stick on a slack wire over the inferno of the European calamity, carrying the whole United States on his shoulders, has done more to discourage interest in military training in this country than any other person, not excluding Lord Rosebery, and it is to this point that the advocates of adequate preparedness must turn if they would have any real success in their campaign.

I am of military age and should gladly serve the country on a universal military service basis, but would not care to fight the battles of England merely because Mr. Wilson thinks the English people have a better system of government even than we have.

I wish also to take this occasion to congratulate you on the fine, clear, patriotic, straight-from-the-shoulder editorials. I think so much of THE TRIBUNE that I put my copy on the rack of dailies in our library at the college here so that the students may have the opportunity of reading it, and it has proven very popular.

Finally, let me say that you are greatly mistaken in thinking that the present administration has no foreign policy. Mr. Wilson's policy (and he is the administration) is: We must let the Mexicans kill, rob and violate our citizens, let Japan write our national laws, and let Great Britain determine where, how much and in what commodities we may carry on a foreign trade, but "damn the Dutch"—we must help kill them.

A CANADIAN REBUKE.

Winnipeg, Canada, May 25.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—When you and your [illegible] who wrote "Ford, a Voice From the Dark," have learned a great deal more history than is taught in your superficial schools and universities, and have had a great deal deeper insight into the realities of life—not the shallow aesthetic egotism that you esteem knowledge—then, perhaps, you will see that Ford, after all, understands society and mankind and the real spring of human action better than the pedants, the posers, the professors, the politicians, or even the world's chief of what you boast is "the world's greatest newspaper." In the meantime people who do know more history and more of many other things than you presumptuous scribes, have to be patient with your empty and shallow [illegible]. Anyhow, thanks for that verbatim interview in three installments. It is appreciated by some who have read history and admire much art, also.

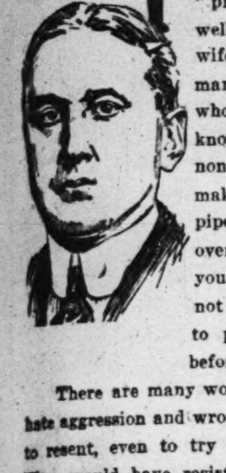
TWO SORTS OF PACIFISTS

By Robert Herrick



THE average pacifist is in something of a quandary before the "preparedness" program. Their state of mind, I fancy, is well exemplified in a brief colloquy between husband and wife I heard the other day. "Shall I put you down to march in the preparedness parade, Mary?" said husband, who is going to Plattsburg this summer. "Um, I don't know," said Mary, who has leanings toward Tolstoi and nonresistance, though for a year and a half she has been making bandages furiously for the allies. "Why, mother!" piped up the Young Heir. "You don't want those Germans over here, killing and robbing us as they did the Belgians, do you?" "No, son," mother replied with conviction. "I do not! But I am not sure the best way to keep them away is to prepare to fight them. . . . I must think it over before I promise to march."

There are many women and not a few men in Mary's state of mind. They hate aggression and wrong and have enough force of character and human nature to resent, even to try to punish wrongdoing and invasion of personal rights. They would have resisted with all their feeble, untrained might the invading hosts had they been Belgians, had they been French men or women in the summer of 1914. But at a safe distance from violence and sudden death the Tolstoian application of Christian doctrine looks beautiful to them. Violence, they say quite properly, begets violence; force provokes force; armament leads to more armament. The only way of breaking the miserable coil of human fate and conquering evil is to resist the desire for revenge, if need be by the personal sacrifice of property and life.

I RESPECT the sincerely convinced nonresister, the pacifist of this type. He has a creed, a theory of conduct and of life, and it is a beautiful one, as every sane person must admit. But I suspect that he—or more often she—would repudiate the creed if the feldgrau men were marching from New York to Buffalo and the Uhlans were popping up around Albany. Instincts deeper than theories would assert themselves, instincts of distant forbears who fought with men and beasts for the right to survive, of ancestors who fought the marauding Dane or the murderous Indian or even the tyrannous English. Their pacifism would go down the wind in a trice when the first enemy's shell burst in the next block killing a dozen or twenty perfectly innocent friends and fellow citizens or the first time a hostile troop demanded quarters at one's home, surely at the first insult to one of our unprotected women by some undisciplined soldier on the loose.

For most of us come of Aryan blood—a struggling, fighting, conquering blood that does not tamely accept the fist of the stronger as manifest destiny and bow to the will of God clothed in the garments of the German military uniform. Even if we were very poor, the exploited pawns of an industrial civilization, to whom the coming of new masters might presumably not greatly disturb, might possibly benefit, still we should resist force with force. For the way of resistance, the idea of struggle, is too deeply seated in our natures.

I RESPECT the nonresisters, but I believe that they not only don't know themselves but also have a wrong notion of this universe. Their philosophy, lovely as it seems on the outside in a quarrelsome world, is essentially pessimistic. In the case of Tolstoi his theory of nonresistance was a direct expression of that fatalistic Asiatic mind which thoroughly permeates Russian thought. The world is at best a poor place of pilgrimage: leave it to God to mend or mar, resign one's self to the inevitable ills of life, and dream of a better world. It is oriental fatalism. I leave it to the doctors of divinity to decide whether Tolstoi rightly interpreted the gospels in this matter. But it would not convince me if he had, for it would be by no means the only instance of oriental influence in the doctrines of the church.

In modern terms, in the language of science, what the nonresisters seek to accomplish is to let evolution work blindly, unopposed by the conscious will and idealism of mankind. We have merely to look into nature to perceive how brutal and how meaningless such a world might easily become. Nature does not care for fine variations, merely for tenacious ones—those "best adapted"; but man all the time seeks with his restless consciousness of a better and a worse to preserve and encourage fine variations that are serviceable for more than strength or propagation.

Now if men should fold their hands before the aggression, the barbarism of predatory rivals, leaving destiny to take care of them and the world, it seems obvious what must happen: the stronger—that is, the cruder and greedier—members of the human family must survive; the most aggressive, the less idealistic peoples must possess the earth. Already they have obtained possession far too universally! For the physical necessity of survival encourages the coarser strains as it is.

If we add to the advantage which our undeveloped natures give them a philosophical negation of effort the world would revert to a complete riot of brute forces. Instead, man must throw the weight of his will and feeble idealism, supported by what strength he has in him, toward the preservation of all finer varieties of life from the domination of the cruder, albeit physically stronger. The battle has been waged for æons: it will go on for generations, all the more acute and fiendish now that men have discovered a devilish ingenuity in the expression of their wills. But to surrender with a vague feeling of helplessness, of human inability to affect the result by willing and struggling—and fighting when driven to it? Never! No Aryan people will ever accept that philosophy of life and of God.

MARY wouldn't when it came to the rub, when the drunken Uhlan banged on her hospitable door and strode through her orderly house, taking what he wanted, even her life and her children's, in the name of some allegiance totally abhorrent to her. Dry eyed and firm lipped she would equip young hopeful to go forth to fight the predatory hounds that were taking what was not theirs because they felt the force within them to take and destroy. . . . I have no doubt about Mary. I sympathize with her wistful yearning for that day when men will reason together on their different wills instead of slaughtering each other, though perhaps I am more skeptical than she of the nearness of the day. And I do not mean to fool myself into thinking that it will come any faster if I sit and fold my hands—even if I raise my persuasive voice in rebuke when the thief and the murderer enters my house.

I have respect for the Marys and their kind, men and women. But I have no respect whatever for the other kind of pacifist or nonpreparedness person—the little or no defense citizen of these United States. He—for it is more often a he than a she this time—has no philosophical convictions, no particular prejudices against brutality, no beliefs in the divine efficacy of turning the other cheek. Not he! He simply considers selfishly and shortsightedly that he "won't get caught." He calculates that his situation, personally and nationally, is "safe." Therefore he knows no reason for disturbing himself, wasting his good money in taxes to maintain armies and navies that possibly will not be needed to keep him safe, to permit him to go on in his absorbing pursuit of the dollar and a comfortable life. This kind of pacifist, who is largely represented in our congress, grows more thickly the farther west of the Alleghenies one goes until the summit of the Rockies is reached. (Over on the other slope they have their own fears, if less acute than in the east, at least sufficient to make them unwilling to trust to Mr. Bryan's unarmed and untrained millions.)

It is a valley philosophy of life, this kind of pacifism, if it can be dignified with the name of philosophy. The middle west—the fat corn land of the country—is the soil most favorable to the growth of the selfish pacifism which I am describing. As a friend from the prairies put it to me: "You can't get the folks out this way to interest themselves in preparedness until the guns are going off in the next county." The human animal feels itself to be "safe" on those broad, hazy prairies: nobody in his generation has ever seen an enemy on them. "There would be time to get ready, at the worst, when the enemy landed on the seacoast, before they could cross the Alleghenies, at any rate, if they ever got so far," etc., etc. "Anyhow, who is going to make war on the United States? Not Germany with England's fleet in the way. Not England with Germany in her rear," etc., etc. Perhaps the confident counting on the assistance of the English fleet in keeping possible enemies from us is the most despicable argument of this form of pacifism.

NO, I have no respect for the sodden form of pacifism so rife in the congress of the United States. I should not be grieved to have those fat farms harried by a band of Uhlans, their bursting barns and grain stacks set on fire. A cavalry corps starting either from Mexico or Canada would do more toward educating the Mississippi valley in the nature of this universe than all the preparedness speeches and parades in a score of years. For these pacifists lack imagination: they must hear the guns go off in the next county, perhaps the next town, before they realize what the danger is.

They lack imagination. That is the real reason for congressional pacifism, for corn fed pacifism generally. It is not rooted in any splendid if unsound idealism—it is no aspiration for the heights of human nature: merely a selfish calculation of the probabilities of personal danger, of the chances of saving one's own hide. Therefore such men are not really pacifists at all: they are merely gamblers and stupid ones at that. And they are something worse: they are the kind of men who are willing to leave to others the dirty jobs of life, who hide from responsibility under a cloud of meaningless words.

Line up and march!

A NATION OF TARTUFFES

By Edward Goldbeck

SPEECH OF THE FAVORITE SON OF UTOPIA.

GENTLEMEN: You will be sadly disappointed in my words if you expect me to make a speech after the pattern used up to this moment by my competitors for the presidency of the United States. They all have assured you of their unselfishness; they all have protested that they did not care for themselves if only their "ideas" would triumph. Mr. Henry Ford has gone so far as to proclaim that "Henry Ford is not important." Even a man like Mr. Roosevelt indulges in this thoughtless cant. I for one will tell you (what you know without my telling you) that I am immensely important to myself and that I trust I am of considerable importance to the country, too. Ideas, gentlemen, are nothing without the right man to realize them. At the middle of the past century millions of Germans shared the "idea" that Germany ought to be united, millions of Italians felt that Italy should be liberated, but who knows if and when these noble aims would have been attained without Bismarck and Cavour? In politics the idea cannot be separated from its execution and the best idea may be spoiled by a man who is not endowed with the rare gift of tackling political problems. Garibaldi certainly was not less of a patriot than Cavour, but if he had been the prime minister of Victor Emmanuel he probably would have ruined his country.

So I am not ashamed of telling you that the country needs me. Of course, there are lots of honest men, clever men, patriotic men besides me, but I think that I have the qualities needed at this very moment of our history, and if I did not think so I would not try to be elected. This sounds arrogant, but it is better to speak the truth at the risk of being hissed at than to use those cheap phrases of false modesty which do not deceive anybody.

EVERY candidate considers himself the providential man; he tries to suggest this conviction to his hearers; it is for this purpose that he speaks to them. Of course he does not only strive to satisfy a petty ambition, to be the greatest bigwig of the country, to live in the White House and be called (for the fun of it!) "Your Excellency" by foreign potentates. Not that I or my competitors are ascetically indifferent to such allurements—we are no saints, and it is human nature to feel flattered by distinctions of this kind even while you shrug your shoulders at them. But what we are yearning for, or at least what I am yearning for, is power much more than show, the power of making my visions live.

I cannot say that I am not important and that the "idea" is all, because my vision of what this country ought to be is personal, and every other man would shape the "idea" which is common to us in a different way. There is an ideal before my inward eye and I think that I am the man to realize it. It would be hypocrisy to say that I am not important.

Americans are accustomed to the queer and disconcerting phenomena of our presidential campaign, but how ludicrous a sight must it be to the foreigner, with all these men whom a mysterious etiquette makes declare again and again that they can not allow their names to be used, that their hat is not in the ring, that they will not fight for the nomination, and so on, while everybody knows that they are dying to get it! Their attitude reminds me of Cæsar refusing the crown, as caustic Casca reports the scene in Shakespeare's drama: "He put it by once: but for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then Marc Antony offered it to him again, then he put it by again; but to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it."

Is it degrading to compete for the highest office of the United States? Certainly not, so why not speak out right away without these reticences of a blushing virgin? Why not say bluntly: "I want it badly and I think you need me badly. It would not satisfy me if you would adopt my 'idea' and reject me"? The idea is nothing at all if you have not the man who can mold the amorphous. Real statesmen hate to extend political advice to the government or a colleague because they know that the execution is all important.

Policy is a sort of warfare, and only the layman believes that a plan of campaign can be laid out and put through without ever renewed adaptation to the shifting and incalculable conditions of reality. Take the nearest instance at hand: Mr. Roosevelt is for preparedness and Mr. Taft is, too. Would preparedness mean the same under the presidency of Mr. Roosevelt and under the presidency of Mr. Taft? Mr. Ford is a pacifist and Mr. Bryan, too, but the "idea" of pacifism would look very different according to the man who would try to shape it.

No, gentlemen, the Ego is not negligible, and that is why I am asking you to do everything in your power to have me elected. The language of sincerity may sound crazy and even indecent to you, because your ears are not wonted to its uncompromising harshness, but we have too much hypocritical talk in this country. Even if we decide to knock a man down, we say that we do it for his best. This was the climax of Mr. Wilson's silly and sinister verbiage.

SILLY and sinister I call this talk because it is inexact, undignified, and pregnant with disagreeable consequences. We did not "knock down" the kaiser, we do not "sit on his neck," and, unprepared and diplomatically embarrassed as we are, we ought to speak gently and politely. Mr. Wilson, at his best a detached philosopher, brags now just as the belligerents used to do in the beginning of the war: the Germans wanted to lick the allies to give them "kultur," the Britishers intended to thrash the Germans to give them "liberty." Both nations believed in knocking down a man for his good.

Mr. Wilson, who can never forget the halcyon days when his scepter was a switch, states that there is a connection between the cuticle of a boy and his moral sense. Be sure that a proud nation like the Germans will not forget this insulting comparison of a schoolmaster run amuck and drunk with diplomatic triumphs which will vanish even more rapidly than his power. Read what Secretary Matsuoka of the Japanese embassy said about the changes in the immigration bill made at Japan's behest and you will see the difference between a real and a would-be diplomat. Not a word of exultation; on the contrary, he treats the matter as absolutely insignificant and emphasizes the fact that "the modifictions do not in any way affect the main purpose and character of the bill." He knows what attitude good taste and diplomatic discretion demand after a distinct success; carefully and adroitly he spares the sensitiveness of the worsted nation, while Mr. Wilson poses as the man with the biceps and the chastiser of naughty boys, who, deeply concerned about their escapades, whips them for their best. Seldom was "Tartufferie" used to such bad purpose.

YOU all know Molière's immortal hypocrite, Tartuffe. If we continue to talk and to act as we have during the last two years, all the Europeans, the allies included, will put us down as a nation of Tartuffes. We had the right to send ammunition over and the German government never contested this right, but it was hypocrisy to set ourselves up as the champions of humanity, to pray officially for peace and to judge with the overbearingness of the unspotted just the sinners who struggled for existence when they committed "wanton and wilful murder" for no other purpose but to prevent our ammunition from reaching England's shores.

Can we help the fact that England is superior to Germany at sea? So we asked. Certainly not. But Germany had a wireless system in this country and we made it impossible for her to use it. Nobody asked then: Can we help the fact that Germany is superior to England? We could have done what we did, gentlemen, and the resentment on the other side would not have been half as bitter as it is now, if this nation had not shown a faculty for Pharisaism and hypocrisy which has never been equaled in history. That is a heritage from the English mother country of which we ought to get rid as quickly as possible. If this hypocrisy is only "subconscious," so much the worse. If a man is mean and knows he is, then he is not a hopeless case. But if a man is mean and thinks he is noble minded, even Wilson could not save him. Whatever we may be, let us try not to fool ourselves. As it is, we are in danger of becoming muddle brained by indulging in a hypocritical phraseology.

THE other day I saw a headline in a paper: "Mexico for the Mexicans!" Unexpectedly enough, the content of the editorial was a plea for intervention. What it said was very sensible, but the writer had deemed it necessary to make the truth palatable by muddling the issue. We all know, gentlemen, that intervention is unavoidable; we all know that the Mexicans will be better off under American protection than under the rule of their land owners. But we ought to acknowledge frankly that we shall intervene not for the peon's sake but for our own sake.

I know that in earlier times the statesmen and diplomats were very proud of cheating each other and the profane herd. Their motto was: Simus faciles in verbis! (Let us be easy in words!). Bolingbroke said that there were three classes of people on this earth: those who are cheated, those who cheat and are cheated, and those who cheat only. The last ones he deemed enviable and worthy of admiration. But these times are slowly vanishing and it is possible and necessary now to speak the truth. I do not know why I should not tell you that we have immense material interests in Mexico, that we cannot tolerate a volcano so near to our country, that Mexico is our "exposed flank," and that we ought to make it safe.

We have come to a condition in this country which makes a man hesitate to confess that he believes in power and expansion. We are immensely proud of our civilization, but what would it be if our ancestors had thought that it was sinful to fight and to expand? If you want to be Phæacians and adopt "Let us have a good time!" for a national motto, then all right, go the way of disaster! The good time will not last very long and the name "American" will be written in water.

BUT if you believe in your historical mission, then have the courage to say so. If you want to exist you will have to expand. A nation which deliberately proclaims and sincerely believes that she is saturated is suffering from arterio sclerosis. Expansion does not necessarily mean war, but if it does, then please do not pretend that you go to war for the enemy's sake. It is ridiculous. Say that you may be wrong before the areopagus of the assembled Philistines and pacifists, but that you have to obey an invincible instinct, the instinct of greatness. Leave the part of Tartuffe to the weak and dare to be yourselves!

INTERLUDE

By Henry B. Fuller

When he was eight years old,
His father, whom he had almost forgot,
Came back,
Hung up a dusty cap and battered sword
Upon the best-room's wall
And, after three long years,
Resumed the daily round of peace.

When he was sixty-two or so,
War loomed again.
With late, dull eyes he visioned it
Plunging across the sea,
Stalking through city streets,
And desecrating homes
In town and country both.

Half a century of peace
And of prosperity
Closed with a thunderclap:
His half-century,
His interlude.
When has this poor, racked world
Seen just its like?
For a whole people
Remote, secure, heedless, and busy,
The fond, the foolish days moved on,
And no one seemed to understand
How little, or how much, they meant.

Through all this time
The great world roundabout
Had heaved and swelled,
A sad, uneasy flood;
And now and then some small spent wave
Came hitherward.
Asia, a third world, slept indeed,
Locked up in her unreckoned chamber;
But, toward the east, kings troubled somewhat—
And somewhat entertained:
That is, vexed one another and their own,
And interested us, if slightly.
"They're lasting still," we said.
"How weak and foolish are those old world ways!
We are better here."

Our boy's own little world—
If world you'll call it—
Lay open wide,
Divinely young and simple,
With candid opportunity for all:
No crowd, no fierce competing, and no tyranny.
Suicide was rare; child-suicide unheard-of;
And if the fair occasion failed at home,
Hope ever beckoned
From wider, richer realms beyond.

Our boy at fourteen made his start in life
Under a friend of his own father;
No interests, old or new, opposed.
His work got welcome and reward:
A daily wage small, true,
Yet fit for daily needs, enough for self-respect.

Later, on manhood's verge,
He moved along
Toward the grand new spaces of the west.
Here success, prosperity,
Welcomed him almost unsolicited.

Sometimes, wafted across from wornout lands,
Came distant echoings that seemed to tell
Of poverty and hardship and oppression.
The victims, too, began to come,
In numbers less or greater.
"They'll be better here," he said.
"But why," he asked,
Half-heedless, half-incredulous,
"Should any one who really deserves
Pe poor or suffer in a world like ours?"

At thirty-five he had a fortune,
And doubled back to make it greater.
A vast new wilderness had been exploited;
Cities had been reared
In ugliness and in corruption.
But the corrupt and hideous
Were little to his sense—
Mere incidentals.
They would pass; if not,
They counted with a force but slight
Against the general gain.
A great people must be allowed
Its minor faults—spots on the sun.

Ten years later—
Various other fortunes lost and won—
He took his family abroad.
With smiling tolerance
He saw the pomp of kings,
And with pleased interest
The paradings of their armies.
The world of Europe
Was but a stage décor.
"How it must cost!" he said.
"Well, let it!
So much the worse for them.
And so much the better"—
He spoke prophetically—
"For us."

And in the orient
He condescended to be pleased
With curios from Peking,
And with the charming life, in miniature,
Of Nippon. He brought home
Lacquers and prints from Tokio,
And friends applauded his exotic tastes.
These people of the east.
He'd met already in our own new west.
There, they seemed misplaced,
And possibly too numerous.
Here, in their native habitat,
They were "so dear," his daughters said.
"Smart little beggars!" he himself observed.

When he was nearing sixty,
That outside world (on either side),
That spectacle, that double pleasure-ground,
That thing apart,
Heaved in a general agony.
He, barricaded 'midst his stocks and bonds,
Felt inconvenience, then annoyance,
Then almost distress,
Until he found a way,
Aided by those who would be "better here,"
To put dread weapons into warring hands
And profit into his own pockets.
This reconciled him, in a measure,
To all the folly, passion, and imprudence
Upon the outskirts.

Rich himself,
He was impatient with the needy;
Self-controlled,
He scorned the rash and reckless.
But the big world was poor and mad.
It looked about with hungry, angry eyes,
And saw our friend so rich and so unguarded;
It taxed him, too, with his offense.
He remained almost indifferent—
Self-confidence had been so long his normal state;
And cleverness, garnered from a varied experience
In new environments, had bred
A ready knack and gumption, equal quite
To any labored, plodding, trained efficiency.

It was still inconceivable
That the thrice-holy ritual
Of dollar-snatching
Should suffer serious check—
We were a business people.
And yet the break was here;
The flood had come upon him.
His happy, busy, prosperous life
Felt a sad jar
As rude, contemptuous hands
Seized on its big, frail frame
And swept across its strings in discord. . . .

Fifty-odd years of poor provinciality,
Lived by one who had assumed himself to be (Through confidence—and through self-confidence —misplaced)
Close to the great world's hub and center,
Yet safe from its alarums.
In truth,
Is not mere money-getting but a special gift
Of an inferior order?
The world has other gifts, and other needs—
And other elements more vital and diverse,
To raise themselves and dominate our friend
And his poor fortune.

THE DANISH WEST INDIES

By John T. Bramhall

NOT, do we want the Danish West Indies for $5,000,000, but can we afford at any price to allow these islands to become a bone of contention among strong European powers? Americans are not wholly blind, nor hopelessly pusillanimous, though there be many circumstances, as Sir Thomas Browne might remark, that might persuade the world that they are so. To unite the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts we have built the Panama canal, but we allow it to remain half fortified, so that some other nation that may wish to rule in the Caribbean may take it from us, in accordance with the hint that Solon gave to Crœsus, regarding his gold.

We have a protectorate over Cuba and Hayti, and our flag flies over Porto Rico. So far so good, providing the defenses are adequate. But to the eastward of Porto Rico, separated by a narrow channel, lie the Danish islands of St. Croix, Charlotte Amalie, and St. John. A portion of the same group, still farther east, called by the name Columbus gave them in 1493, the Virgin islands (or the islands of the Eleven Thousand Virgins) belong to Great Britain.

The Danish West Indies are valueless to Denmark (owing to economic reasons) but would be, both commercially and strategically, valuable to the United States. With these islands in our possession and properly fortified, the United States would have a breastwork to the eastward secure against all comers. Left in the hands of a weak power, the islands offer a temptation to any strong naval power to defy our Monroe doctrine and establish a convenient foothold near the gates of the Panama canal.

The history of these islands, a shuttlecock between Dutch and English, French and Dane, and between chartered company and crown, is an interesting and instructive one, but without going into details, two features stand out from the tale of conquest and rapine. First, the sale by the French governor, De Poincy, of the islands of St. Christopher, St. Martin, St. Bartholomew, Tortuga, and St. Croix, to the Knights of Malta for 120,000 livres, the sale being confirmed by Louis XIV. in 1653.

The declared object of the "concession" was that "an establishment might be formed by them (the Knights of Malta) in the West Indies for the service and defense of Christianity and for the conversion of the savages to the Christian religion."

The real purpose, of course, was to raise money. The crown repurchased the privileges in 1665 for 500,000 livres. It is also instance of the governor of St. Domingo interesting to know that in 1674, at the (then French) it was determined to abandon St. Croix entirely. Three vessels and several transports were sent to remove the colony. After sacrificing all their effects, crops, horses and cattle, the unhappy colonists set fire to their homes and sailed for St. Domingo.

"Strange procedure on the part of the French government," writes a historian, "thus to abandon an island so fertile, its rich soil having yielded tobacco, cotton, indigo and sugar, and after the immense sacrifice of treasure and life that the colony had cost." But there was a policy of "pork" in those days as now, and the scuttlers demanded to know "what are we making out of St. Croix?"

The island of St. Thomas was settled about 1625, and its history is similar to that of its sister island. It is a curious coincidence that the English, when they took St. Martins, St. Eustatius, and St. Thomas from the Dutch in 1667, finding that the two former islands were more fertile, abandoned St. Thomas, compelling the colonists to remove their effects thither. But at least they permitted them to carry away what they could.

The island remained uninhabited until 1671, when the thrifty Danes, finding it to be a perfectly good island, though much in need of new decorating, decided, with the consent of the owner, to move in. The new governor, Iverson, who brought with him a goodly number of Danish and Dutch colonists (some returning to their abandoned estates), issued a proclamation obliging every person to attend service on Sunday on penalty of twenty-five pounds of tobacco, and also: "For the defense and good of the country, every householder shall keep in his house for himself and every man in his service a sword with belt, and a gun with sufficient powder and ball, and also each householder shall have two pounds of powder, or more if he please," on penalty of 100 pounds of tobacco.

And be it observed that St. Thomas remained peaceably under the Danish flag for over 100 years, until the larger interests of the Napoleonic wars made them temporarily British.

St. Thomas has in its port of Charlotte Amalie one of the finest harbors in the Antilles, deep and spacious, and famed for its security from hurricanes. It is probably the best harbor east of Samoa bay, in northern San Domingo (which Gen. Grant vainly endeavored to secure, when fair opportunity was offered for the United States).

Stephen Bonsal, in his "The American Mediterranean" (1912), declares it to be naturally impregnable, and adds that should the Germans ever seek land as well as commerce in the West Indies (which he thought quite likely), there were indications that they would take St. Thomas, and also the Dutch island of Curacao, on the Venezuelan coast.

If they were permitted to do so, they would in this way, he points out, secure strategic positions as strong, if not stronger, as those which the English and we ourselves possess. The Hamburg-American line, says the same authority, has made St. Thomas, now deserted for years by ocean liners, their headquarters in the West Indies, and the Germans make themselves very much at home there, or did before the outbreak of the great war, in prospect of the projected German exploitation of the Caribbees.

To expatiate on the resources of the Danish islands would be to invite criticism as to our motives. Suffice it to say that the climate is healthful, the soil rich, and the plantations may easily be restored to their former prosperity, as in Porto Rico. There are valuable forests and coal deposits. The area is about one-tenth that of Rhode Island, and the population has dwindled from over 43,000 in 1835 to about 30,000.

The exports and imports in 1906 were less than $2,000,000. The social atmosphere, to quote Bonsal again, is rather more American than in any other parts of the West Indies, even including our own possessions.

The planters and the farm managers are for the most part men of Irish birth or descent, who have become Americanized, and there are also quite a number of typical Yankees, skippers, who, having wearied of the sea, have cast anchor in this snug harbor. They had once a prospect of wealth in the success of the American treaty, but it faded away. "I knew it was all up with our real estate spec," said one sugar logged skipper, who hailed from Cape Cod in happier days, "when I read that King William had gone to Copenhagen and kissed King Christian on both cheeks and asked him not to sell out to Uncle Sam. A pair of kings ain't much in poker, but I guess it makes a strong hand in European politics."

Still, a flush beats a pair of kinds, and, to drop the poker metaphor, we can, if we will, transform these neglected and poverty stricken islands into an earthly paradise.

U. S. MUST TAKE DOMINANT PLACE, BURTON ASSERTS

Ex-Senator from Ohio Urges Defense, Conservation, and a Strong Trade Policy.

Below will be found the seventh of a series of articles on Republican presidential possibilities. They will reveal the attitude of the various men on the public questions of the day and throw light on the personal characteristics of each.

BY MARK S. WATSON.

Cleveland, O., June 2.—[Special.]—The adoption of entirely new policies, suited to a nation which has outgrown insularity and must take a dominant place at the world's council table, is vigorously urged upon the United States by former United States Senator Theodore E. Burton of Ohio.

With the solid delegation of that state, forty-eight strong, and good representation from scattered commonwealths, Senator Burton will come before the convention next week as a formidable contender.

The policy outlined by him today for THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE attracts attention as—in the words of a confessed Burton enthusiast—probably the broadest, best devised, and most constructive of all the preconvention policies presented by Republican candidates.

Not only does it press vigorously the issues of preparedness and national rights but it takes up domestic problems which other candidates have ignored in their enthusiasm for the more obvious issues.

Uses No Snap Judgment.

Yet in his discussion of conservation, of governmental expenditures, of business encouragement and business control the Ohio candidate loses none of his perspective and none of his acute realization that there are international issues. The Burton program of 1916 is an entity slowly and carefully put together from parts which are the result of shrewd investigation.

"National preparedness is by all means the first need," he said. "It can't be delayed, for emergencies are dangerous, and we do not know what is going to happen. It is possible the countries now at war will be so exhausted at its close that they may not want any more for a long time, but that is only a possibility, and even on probabilities we cannot depend. We must give attention to a stronger army and navy.

"We do not want an eggressive war. We do not wish to engage in a war for conquest or for annexation, but we must bear in mind that in recent years we have become a dangerously rich temptation to the invader, and we must not be in a position where we can be Belgianized.

"I am not alogether satisfied with the army bill as agreed on in conference, but let us make the best of it. We may need universal training, for I fear we will have great difficulty in gettting sufficient men of the right sort under the volunteer system."

Calls Mexican Policy Weak.

Next only to preparedness Senator Burton places the whole international policy of the United States. He makes no attempt to conceal his complete disapproval of the Mexican fiasco and of the uncertain position the administration has taken onother international affairs.

"We have the secretary of war resigning because the administration won't go far enough, and the secretary of peace resigning because it goes too far," he remarked, and a little later, "It is better to steer by the north star than by a comet."

"The difficulty with the Mexican policy has been both the absence of vigor and the exercise of partiality as demonstrated by the preference of the administration for Carranza and the unspeakable Villa.

"Had our policy been consistent, based on American rights and our interest in maintaining order in Mexico, I believe it would not have been necessary to consider the question or intervention, for no administration or faction could long exist in Mexico if visited by our displeasure."

Urges Strong Trade Policy.

Senator Burton's plea for a complete reformation of international policy is not considered solely with current affairs; more, perhaps, with the future. He is a firm believer in this country's adoption of a vigorous, aggressive trade policy, and the enforcement of such a policy by a diplomatic and consular service selected for efficiency instead of political orthodoxy which the successful party wishes to reward at the cost of the nation's prestige.

"Our foreign trade has been neglected in part because this countrty is so thoroughly self-sufficient," he remarked.

"Not only must we be greater, but we must be a lot better, and to become so we must mend our diplomatic manners and put in these highly important posts only those who are fit."

Wants Business Reform.

He turned swiftly to domestic affairs, and here he found insistent demands for national reform, notably in the conduct of business.

"We need free play for business. I do not mean that it should be uncontrolled. On the contrary, it should be watched scrupulously, and fraud, dishonesty, and oppression of small producer or merchant, employé, or consumer should be punished with the utmost severity. But I mean that business should not be compelled to undergo the further experimentation of academic theory. Our treatment of business should square with our treatment of the other great things of the day."

"We have been absolutely neglecting the vitally important matter of conservation of our resources," he continued. "The result is that some are lying quite unused, a terrible demonstration of inefficiency, and others have fallen into the hands of a few great aggregations of capital. There must be a radical reform in this field.

"Our methods of expending public funds are bad. We ought to have an intelligent budget system."

SOCIETY GUESTS SEE BILLINGS-NICHOLS WEDDING

The Rev. John Timothy Stone Performs Ceremony in the Fourth Presbyterian.

The mediaevel arches of the Fourth Presbyterian church, with their cathedral-like candles, the altar fern covered, and the center aisle a pathway lined with huge white peonies were the background of one of the prettiest weddings of the season yesterday when Miss Margaret Billings, daughter of Dr. Frank Billings, became the bride of George Roseman Nichols Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. George Nichols of the Hotel Metropole

The Rev. John Timothy Stone, pastor of the church, performed the ceremony, and the bride and bridegroom made their responses in voices clear and sure, though they were not the most clarion "I wills" that have rung through cathedral naves.

Bride in White Satin.

The bride wore a gown of white satin, silver lace trimmed, white billowed about her, and belied its majesty only by the shortness of its skirt. A large capuchin collar of satin stood out from her neck, and a long court train of satin swept behind her. The veil drifting over it was of tulle, with a half wreath of orange blossoms confining it into a coronet in the back. A band of silver across the forehead held the veil about the bride's head. Her bouquet was of lilies of the valley only, full and somewhat of a relief in its primness, after the omnipresent shower bouquet.

The matron of honor, Mrs. William Halstead Vander Poel of New York, a cousin of the bride, was gowned in a billowy paniered gown of orchid taffeta. The bride's other attendants were Mrs. James C. Hutchins Jr., Mrs. Jay Morse Ely, and Mrs. Bruce Borland. They wore frilled and flounced gowns of Nile green tulle. All the bride's attendants carried huge bouquets of lavender and pink sweet peas and they all wore hats of the sheerest chiffon, transparent as to brim and jaunty as to tilt.

Miss Mildred Blair.

Miss Mildred Bair, gowned in black tulle and taffeta, did not actually serve in the bridal party, on account of the recent bereavement in the family, but she stood at the back of the church and arranged the bride's train before she walked down the aisle.

Howard Lincoln of Springfield, Mass., served the bridegroom as best man.

NEW BRIDGES

People Urged to Vote for This Bond Issue on Monday.

BY CHARLES H. WACKER.

[Chairman Chicago Plan Commission.]

New bridges are a part of Chicago's housecleaning plan. The old bridges are a menace to sanitation. The center piers obstruct the flow of the water. The old bridges seriously interfere with navigation. The old bridges retard street traffic. Architecturally they are a relic of forgotten days.

These four reasons are sufficient to pass the bridge bond issue at next Monday's election by the biggest majority ever given any bond issue. Reinforcing these reasons is the recommendation of the executive committee of our great Association of Commerce, with its 4,000 business leaders from every section of the city.

Sanitation, navigation and traffic facilitation are three of Chicago's chiefest assets. Next to the safety of the public health they rank in importance. Attractiveness comes next. Why should the Chicago river and adjacent property constitute the most disreputable part of our city, physically speaking? The reverse is true in all large cities of the world.

No citizen with the interests of Chicago properly at heart will deny the advantage of replacing the old bridges with new, adequate, modern, sightly structures. We are all rapidly beginning to contemplate Chicago as our larger home.

It is not difficult to do the things in Chicago that we must do for our health, our commerce and our decency of appearance when we appreciate that we are doing these things for our larger home. The citizen is indeed a shiftless fellow who does not, and especially at this time of the year, clean house and make such necessary improvements as will add to the maintenance and the appearance of his individual home.

What is good business in the private home is good business in the larger home. The people's instant and hearty support, in past elections, of all public improvements in line with the plan of Chicago, indicates that they will vote "Yes" at the election next Monday, June 5.

MAY GRAND JURY BACKS JAIL BOND

Eleventh Hour Appeal to Voters in Behalf of Little Ballot Made by City.

BRIDGE ITEMS LOOM.

The May grand jury in its final report to Acting Chief Justice Barrett of the Criminal court urged support of the proposed bond issue for a new jail and Criminal court building.

An eleventh hour appeal to the voters on behalf of the little ballot proposition for the issuance of $3,750,000 worth of bonds for the extension of the street lighting system was issued yesterday by the department of gas and electricity.

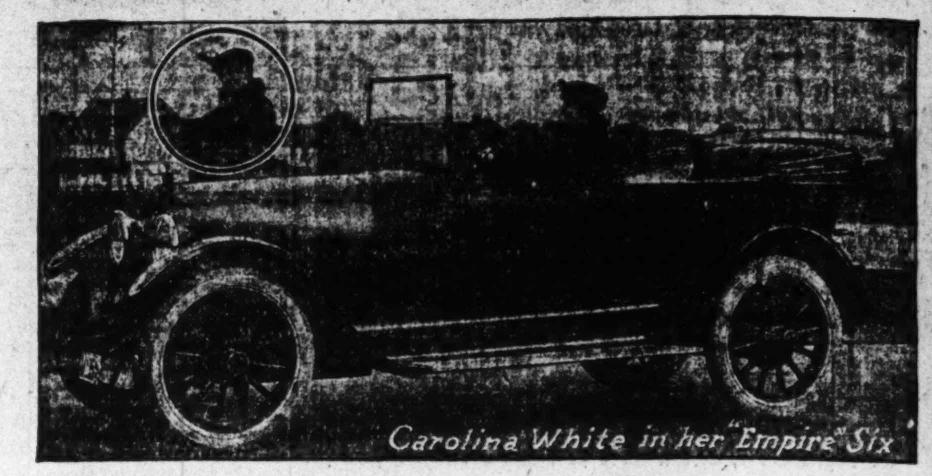
Publicity given the bond issue questions has concerned almost entirely the $5,100,000 issue for the bridge building program. The electrical department pleads that because of the importance of the bridge question in the eyes of many officials the street lighting plan has been neglected.

In brief, the light bonds are intended to provide for the installation of 31,300 street lamps in districts now inadequately lighted. It is contended this expense should not be taken out of any one year's revenue, because of the permanency of the improvement, which will benefit at least one generation.

The appeal says in part:

"The old argument of 'increased taxes' should not be used against this bond issue, as it has been shown that the increase would amount to only a few cents for each $100 of present taxes, and the urgent need of additional lights should outweigh this small addition in the minds of public spirited citizens.

"The authorization of this bond issue by the voters will increase the city's street lighting 26 per cent, with an increase in anual cost of operation of only 9 per cent."



Carolina White in her "Empire" Six

THE "EMPIRE" Six is a happy combination car. It combines style, real downright elegance and high-grade construction. All these essentials speak for themselves.

THE "CONTINENTAL" high speed Motor is the world's best. In fact every part of the Empire Six and Four is high class and positively standardized in quality. "This is guaranteed."

The most attractive car on the street, is the general verdict. It has the most beautiful body lines, and the painting and trimming are strictly in keeping.

BOY SCOUTS DEMONSTRATE ABILITY.

COL. "TEDDY" GREETS ADMIRERS.

Admirers of Colonel Roosevelt to the number of 1,500 made a pilgrimage on foot from Oyster Bay to Sagamore Hill, and in a body marched up the hill—not until, however, "Teddy" got up on something high and cordially told what he thought of them.

CONGRESS UNION GETS TROUT AID

State Suffrage Leader Always Regretted She Quit League.

Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout is a Congressional Unionist once more. She went over to the Congressional Union's rooms in the Michigan Boulevard building yesterday and withdrew her resignation.

For several years Mrs Trout was president of the Illinois Equal Suffrage association, the rival organization in Chicago to the union. Mrs. Trout belonged to the union, too but when they came to Chicago and opened offices she resigned, with other leading suffragists.

Her reconciliation with the union took place in a friendly little talk between Mrs. Trout, Miss Alice Paul, chairman of the union, and Mrs Helena Hill Weed of the union's legislative committee.

Regrets Her Resignation.

"I resigned without sleeping on it," Mrs. Trout explained, "and I have regretted it ever since. I have come to find out that all the stories told about the union are not true. I believed them at first and resigned. Usually I sleep over an important matter like that, and then I'm less liable to make a mistake.

"It seems to me that we shall get a suffrage plank, and we ought to work for the indorsement of the Susan B. Anthony amendment. The character of the woman's party which the union is to organize was not clear to me, and I misunderstood the idea of it. I always have liked the women of the Congressional union."

The suffragists of the Congressional union accepted Mrs. Trout into their ranks again with pleasure. Her resignation from the union had been considered a great victory by the opposing forces a few weeks ago.

Treatment by Her Own Group.

Some of the women believe that the treatment Mrs. Trout received by her own group was in a large measure responsible for her action, although she is not giving up her affiliation with the state association. Mrs. Trout's friends asserted she was slighted in the arrangements for the parade and in connection with some of the social affairs being planned for this week.

DEPEW STARTS BY TELLING YARN

Then Old G. O. P. Wheelhorse Sees Chance for a Garfield Surprise.

Former Senator Chauncey M. Depew, who has attended every Republican national convention since the formation of the party in 1854, reached Chicago yesterday with high hopes for Elihu Root's nomination, but in a charitably forgiving spirit toward Col. Roosevelt for getting under his steam roller here four years ago.

"We are all Republicans this time for the same reason that Jim was a Democrat," said the perennial delegate, although neither coffee nor cigars were at hand. "You know a school teacher, who made a fad of teaching contemporary politics to his pupils, one morning decided to put three of his brightest to the test.

"'Now, Tom,' he said, 'you are a Republican, and Bill, I believe, is a Prohibitionist, and Jim is a Democrat. To the one who states the best reasons for his political faith I'll give a pet woodchuck.'

"'I'm a Republican,' said Tom, 'because the Republicans rid the country of slavery.'

"'And I'm a Prohibitionist because rum is the curse of the land,' said Bill.

"'Good reasons,' said the teacher. 'Now, Jim, why are you a Democrat?'

"'I'm a Democrat because I want that woodchuck,' said Jim.

"We Want the President."

"And we're all Republicans this year because we want the next president," continued Mr. Depew. "Perfectly clear, isn't it? I am here primarily for Root, because I believe he is the best equipped man for the position. But I will support any man the convention names. And unless unexpected bitterness is developed at the convention. I believe every other good Republican and Bull Moose will, too.

"We have had three years of Wilson. The first year he went through the kindergarten, during the next two years he struggled trough the grade school. The question is, does the country want the expense of sending him through high school?

"In Root we have a graduate of the school of politics and statesmanship, a man who as a cabinet member and as senator made a record unexcelled in the country."

Mr. Depew said that the Republican nominee would have a hard fight because, he said, Wilson is strong. He declared that party leaders should keep that fact in mind and not let bitter factional fights disrupt the Republican party.

Recalls Garfield Nomination.

"The convention as it apparently shapes up now has similar aspects to the convention of 1884 when Grant was defeated for a third term nomination.

"At that time I was for Senator Edmunds of Vermont. The machine was for Grant, and he had 306 ironclad votes. I saw that the only way we could beat him was by killing the unit rule. There was a fellow named Elihu B. Washburn whom some of the Illinois delegates were supporting. It was a small boom, a d——n small boom, but it was a boom. An Illinois delegate came to me and said: 'Promise me that you won't go for Elihu Washburn and the Illinois delegation will support you in knocking the unit rule out.'

"I agreed not to name Washburn. We smashed the unit rule. The convention began to vote and reached a deadlock, with Sherman and Grant, of course, leading. Just one delegate, I don't know who he was, had been voting right along for Garfield. Nobody had talked Garfield. Suddenly there came the deluge. One state chairman got up and voted for Garfield. Another joined. In fifteen minutes it was all over and Garfield was chosen. He was the most surprised man at the convention.

"We may have something like that here. And, by the way, I forgot to say Jim got that woodchuck."

Mid-Year Model
257 Cars in One

Mitchell
SIX

$1325 f. o. b. Racine
With 26 Extra Features

All 1916 Attractions

Combined in One Car—Plus 26 Extra Features

This Mid-Year Mitchell, in its new ideas and its extras, shows you one result of efficiency. All this added value is due to John W. Bate, who has cut our factory costs in two.

If you saw this Mid-Year Mitchell without knowing the facts, you would say that such a car at our price is impossible. For it undersells any other car of its size and power and grade.

Then you might say—when you saw all the extras—that somewhere we had skimped. So we have to tell you of John W. Bate to give you a right conception.

We Have Saved 50%

Years ago, John W. Bate, the efficiency engineeer, was brought to this organization.

He has built here a model efficiency plant. He has equipped it with thousands of time-saving machines. Now it represents an investment of $5,000,000.

He has, in this way, cut our factory costs in two. We are building the Mitchell for less than a like car would cost anywhere else in the world.

And all of our extras—beauties, luxuries and conveniences—are paid for through factory savings.

26 Extras Free

This Mid-Year Mitchell has 26 unique features. Each is an extra which all motorists want. But in other cars they cost an extra price.

These include a power tire pump, reversible headlights, light in the tonneau, a locked compartment, cantilever springs, an extra-cost carburetor. You will find in this Mitchell, at no extra price, 26 such attractions which other cars omit.

These make the Mitchell, in those 26 ways, the most complete car on exhibit.

257 Cars in One

You will find here also all the best new ideas brought out in 257 Show models.

This Mid-Year Mitchell was completed after the New York Shows. And it embodies in one car all the new touches which proved themselves attractive. Every new-model car has some of them. The Mitchell has them all.

So you will see here the most up-to-date car that's out

Lifetime Service

Mr. Bate's idea is that cars should last like watches. That is another side to his efficiency.

He has studied the Mitchell part by part, to attain simplicity, lightness and strength. He has made in the car over 700 improvements.

In each part he insists on a big margin of safety. But he gets it by using Chrome-Vanadium steel. By using drop forgings and tough stamped steel. There are 440 such parts in the Mitchell.

One Bate-built Mitchell, as a result, has run 218,734 miles. Six of them have averaged 164,372 miles each—over 30 years of ordinary service. There are no other like records in Motordom.

Mr. Bate is Done

John W. Bate's work now seems done. He says he has reached his limit, in the factory and the car. He would never permit us to mention his efforts until they reached this completion.

With all these things together, the Mid-Year Mitchell is an interesting sight. No motor car lover should miss it. It has all that men know to make a car handsome, enduring and complete. Your Mitchell dealer will show you a hundred perfections you never have thought of, perhaps.

Go see this model. Then ride in it, put it through hard tests, and watch the car perform.

Hundred Point Six

Here Today—

Chicago will now see Kissel's new

Hundred Point Six—

IT'S here—right on our floor—ready for your inspection—Kissel's ultimatum to the automobile world—

A powerful, red-blooded, able-bodied Six, full of pep—with such pronounced superiorities and completeness that it fully justifies its name—Hundred Point Six.

It's the car you have been thinking about and waiting for—possessing all that you have long sought in a popular priced Six—characteristics Kissel has always known how to put into a car, but which have for the first time been available at so low a price.

A car of a Hundred Quality Features and Kissel-built throughout—at $1095.

With an engine so pliant and quiet that it establishes a new conception of the fluency and suppleness of power without noise or waste.

Quick on the getaway—a mile a minute if you like—and ambling down to the veriest creep on high gear.

It is a stunning car—the smartest car you have seen, with proportions so harmonious, contour and lines so symmetrical, comforts and refinements so distinctively individual that "custom built" is written all over it.

But in its vitals—the under-the-surface details—the parts-next-to-the-road—it is here that the Hundred Point Six exercises its most potent appeal.

You will find a generous use of the best bearings and bushings, incomparable axles and brakes and many structural innovations, including a new lubrication system that does away with all but two grease cups.

Now is the time to see this car—come early—we want to give you special attention. We want to tell you of the Hundred Quality Features—we want you to compare them with other cars—and what is still more important, book your order as early as possible.

The All-Year Car

In originating the "two-in-one" idea Kissel made ten men drive in winter where one drove before. The new All-Year bodies offered with the Hundred Point Six chassis are ideal in construction and finish for both summer and winter driving.

The stampede for the Hundred Point Six will necessitate rotation delivery as orders are received and we don't want you to be disappointed. Neither do you—and you won't if you ACT NOW.

RECORDS SHATTERED AS BADGERS WIN BIG NINE MEET

MOGRIDGE AND YANKEES MARCH OVER SOX, 5 TO 0

Discard's Fire Stops Hose, While Mates' Big Guns Yield Victory.

SCOTT FIRST VICTIM.

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Chicago's White Sox gave a demonstration of unpreparedness yesterday at Comiskey park when they allowed the invading New York Yankees to slip up upon them and capture the south side ramparts in quite decisive fashion. The score was 5 to 0 and at the finish the Sox appeared to be fagged and battered, while the enemy kept its ranks intact and looked fit to win another fight before sundown.

Only for a short time at the start of the contest did the Sox hold the invaders even in the fight. For four innings neither side did any business, though the Sox did start three different assaults that threatened. However, they lacked the final punch each time and then in the fifth the New York sharpshooters opened a rapid fire attack which broke through the Chicago defense. Three hits in a row put one tally over.

Big Guns Complete Rout.

After that there was some long range shooting by the enemy's big guns, a four base drive in the sixth adding a count to the score, while a pair of doubles and a triple produced two more in the eighth and a base on balls and another three baser added one in the ninth.

It fell to the lot of George Mogridge, tall and left handed, to gain the major portion of the glory in the battle. George once was an aspiring pitcher for Comiskey, but didn't know as much about war in those days as he knows now.

Holds Sox to Six Hits.

Naturally George likes to defeat the White Sox. He turned the trick in New York when the Sox were there, and he did it again yesterday with even greater ease. His long, swinging, left handed curves had the Sox batters badly fussed and even our sluggers couldn't connect to any great extent. Joe Jackson, who had made nine hits in succession before George appeared, had to be content with one blow in four times at bat. The Sox made only six swats all told, and three of them were poled by Ray Schalk.

Along with the swell hurling of Mogridge the Yankees performed some thrilling fielding stunts, which kept the Sox away from the home plate. At least three times the attack of the Sox was broken by some play quite unusual. Once Schalk was shot dead at the home plate by a rifle throw from Hugh High. Schalk attempted to leg it home from third after High had plucked a fly ball in left field. Another time Jack Ness was brought down at third base when he tried to race from first to third after Jackson had poled one saftely to right field. Frank Gilhooley was the sharpshooter who nailed the big first baseman.

Bunch Swats Off Scott.

Manager Rowland picked Jim Scott to hurl for the Sox, and his choice was all right, too. Jim toiled for seven innings and allowed only four base hits, but he permitted three of them to come in rapid succession in the fifth. After one was out, Pipp, Peckinpaugh, and High all slammed the ball to safe ground and the first man counted on the third man's swat. Up to that time the invaders had died three in a row.

In the next round, with one out, Lee Magee, ex-Federal league star, drove one to right center. It would have been an out if Hap Felsch hadn't been playing with a stiff knee. As it was, Hap reached the ball but couldn't hold it, and it bounded away, while Hap took a header into the grass. J. Collins recovered the ball and it was relayed to the plate, but Magee was there first.

Sox Threaten in Seventh.

In the last of the seventh the Sox had two men on with two out when it was time for Scott to hit, so he was yanked and Lynn was sent in to fan out for him. Lefty Williams took the slab job in the eighth and Nunamaker greeted him with a double. Mogridge sacrificed and Gilhooley tripled, Nunamaker counting. Magee produced a sacrifice fly, letting Gilhooley score.

Joe Benz appeared as hurler for the ninth, and he, too, had trouble. He walked Peckinpaugh and then fanned High, but Peck stole second because Terry dropped Schalk's peg. Nunamaker then tripled, sending Peck home. Score:

Notes

The Sox may be better prepared to battle the Yanks today. Tex Russell is the probable pitcher.

Jim Scott looked unbeatable in the first four rounds. He fanned five batsmen and no one got near first base.

The big parade downtown doubtlessly kept many fans away from the ball park, but there were about 12,000 who got tired out at the parade and went out to the game.

Fred McMullin wasn't able to resume his position at third base, as his sprained foot still kept him limping. Weaver held down third and Terry performed at short.

All members of the Yankees were presented yesterday with preparedness pins by Owners Huston and Ruppert. It is the national emblem in shield form and set in solid gold mounting, and we were told the pins cost $8 apiece.

Frank Baker, the famous home run hitter, who has been out of the game because of an injury, was back on third for the Yanks, but failed to hit even a single. He was purposely passed, however, in the eighth, for fear he would clout one.

Eddie Collins was unable to hit safely in four attempts. In the first inning, however, he smacked out a line drive, only to have it turn into a double play. Weaver was on first and the hit and run play was tried. Eddie slashed a hot one right to Peckinpaugh and Weaver was doubled before he could get back to first base.

KENNEDY WINS OVER HATCH BY ONE FOOT

After a nip and tuck race of nine miles over northwest side streets, William Kennedy of the Bricklayer A. C. breasted the tape less than a foot ahead of Sidney Hatch, unattached. Both runners were former teammates on the Illinois A. C. track team. They jogged over the course side by side, each saving his reserve strength, and staged a neck and neck sprint at the finish.

Kennedy's time for the distance was 52:03½. B. French of the First Regiment A. A., winner of various local distance events this season, was outdistanced by the former tricolor club rivals and came in third. He had been counted a favorite for the race. The Sleipner A. C. sponsored the run.

A novice two mile run preceding the nine mile grind was captured by William Tews, unattached. George Davidson, Sleipner, came in second, and Carter Hendricks, a teammate, was third.

JAIL SENTENCE FOR PLAYER.

Grand Rapids, Mich., June 3.—Patrick Duncan, center fielder of the Grand Rapids team, was convicted today in justice court of assault and battery and was sentenced to pay a $50 fine and spend ten days in the county jail. During a game with Muskegon here last Sunday Duncan attacked Umpire Shuster.

"TRIBUNE" TEST FOR AMATEURS CARDED TODAY

BY OTTO A. ENGEL.

For you, Mr. Amateur Baseball Player, is this day set aside. On this day and date the first of a series of tryouts conducted by THE TRIBUNE will be staged at Weeghman park, beginning at 9 o'clock. From this and subsequent tests to be held weekly during the next two months will be chosen amateur players who will accompany White Sox and Cubs on their final invasions of the east, with all expenses to be paid by THE TRIBUNE.

Every player whose name appears on this list, with the exception of those who have been excused for excellent reasons, is expected to be on hand ready to start the tryout at the time Messrs. Clarence Eldridge, Charles Reading, and Jimmy Ryan, acting as board of jujdges, give the word for the first play.

Further Tests for Leaders.

From this list of forty-four players named for the first test from four to seven will be selected to appear in the semi-final about the last Sunday in July. Fifty or more players will qualify for the penultimate rounds, and from this number, from twenty to twenty-five will be picked for the final tryout one week before the White Sox start eastward on their last trip.

The record number of 399 entries, set last season, was passed during the week, when forty-six more nominations raised the total enrollment to 427. It is certain that 500 or more youngsters will enlist for the trials, thus making this tournament the biggest thing ever staged for the amateur player in this country.

Bear in mind that the entry blank will be published for the last time tomorrow morning. The entry list will close at midnight Wednesday, and if your letter is postmarked after that you will be ineligible. If you haven't clipped the blank, do so at once and mail it to the Amateur Baseball editor of THE TRIBUNE.

Following are the players who will report at Weeghman park at 9 o'clock this morning:

Passes Off Vaughn Defeat Cubs in Boston Combat, 3-2

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Boston, Mass., June 3.—[Special.]—Frank Allen, namesake of the famous outlaw, baffled the Cubs in the pinches today and permitted the Braves to corral a victory out of Jim Vaughn's wildness in the second game of the set here. Score, 3 to 2.

The Tinx outbatted the Braves by a little margin, but were unable to finish several things which they started, notably a ninth inning rally in which they filled the bags with nobody out, and still could not overcome a two run lead. Double plays stopped them twice when things looked most salubrious.

Passes Bring Cubs Defeat.

The Braves made only seven hits off three Cub hurlers, but one of them was generous and furnished a lot of free transportation, which privilege they were mean enough to abuse. Vaughn lacked control at the start and never did get over it in the three innings he worked. Five bases on balls were issued by Hippo, and with the help of those the Braves made their three runs.

Prendergast and Brown held the enemy down the rest of the way, but the Cubs could not overcome that three run lead. For six innings Allen held the Cubs to three scattered hits. The Braves made only four off Vaughn while he lasted. They were timely, however.

Maranville's single, Egan's walk, and Collins' sacrifice put two runners within scoring distance of the plate in the first inning. Magee drove them home with a two bagger just inside the first base. Koney rolled out, Smith walked, and then an attempted double steal resulted in the demise of Magee off third.

First Two Men Get Walks.

Vaughn grew worse in the third and passed Collins and Magee before any one was gone. Koney forced Magee at second, but Smith singled, sending in Collins with what proved the winning run.

Prendergast picked up the game in the fourth and allowed only two hits and no tallies in three innings, but gave way to a pinch hitter when the Cubs threatened to win the game in the seventh. Saier led that attack with a double, and Archer scored him with a single. Mulligan popped out, so Yerkes was sent to bat for Prendergast. Steve struck out and Archer was doubled at second trying to steal on the third whiff.

Cubs Fill Bases; One Run.

The Cubs came close to winning out in the ninth. Zim led with a clean single. Saier slapped a high bounder over Allen's head and beat it to first putting Heine on third. Archer scratched a gentle roller in front of the plate and beat the play so far that Allen did not throw to first, so Zim could not score. Mulligan pasted a warm grounder to Maranville and was doubled up with Zwilling, who went on to run for Archer. Zim scored on the play. Doolan batted for Brown and perished by way of Egan.

Notes

Boston, Mass., June 3.—[Special.]—Day off tomorrow.

One more game here on Monday.

Mann was absent in Springfield on business matters, otherwise he would have been in against Lefty Allen.

Evers took himself out of the game because a left hander started against the Braves and did not go back into the game because he was not needed.

Allen used to be a Cub hoodoo when he was pitching for Brooklyn before he jumped to the Federal league. His jump did not break the jinx.

Egan struck out, but Maranville stole second on the third whiff and Saier followed with a corking stop of a hit by Collins.

Mulligan made a swell stop of Maranville's clout in the fourth, but went so deep for it that he could not throw the Rabbit out at first.

Manager Stallings was absent attending the funeral of Bud Sharpe, a former Brave, and the flag at the ball park was at half mast in deference to the player's memory.

Brown struck out Smith in the eighth and the batter took such a vicious swing at the third one that the bat slipped out of his hands and went beyond the pitcher's slab. Brownie hurdled it safely.

A telegram from President Weeghman told Tinker that a deal finally had been closed for George Pierce, who goes to the Toledo club under an optional agreement for the rest of the season. This reduces the Cub roster to twenty-three players, not including the manager, who has suspended himself, Hendrix, and Zeider to keep within the limit

HART AND FISHER TO LEAD MAROONS

Two Maroon captains for 1917 were elected at a meeting of "C" men yesterday. Norman Hart of Cunningham, Kas., will lead the baseball nine next year and Jerome Fisher, who won first place in the high jump and tied for first honors in the pole vault in the conference meet, will be captain of the track team.

Hart has developed into the best hitter on the Maroon team and has been raised from eighth place in the batting order to the cleanup position. Fisher has won two letters in football, playing center on the Maroon team for the last two seasons. He is a former University High star.

DREYFUSS WANTS TO BAR GARRY HERRMANN'S JOB.

Pittsburgh, Pa., June 3.—[Special.]—President Barney Dreyfuss of the Pirates has declared war on Garry Herrmann, chairman of the national commission, as a result of the difficulty over Player Sisler, who was claimed by Pittsburgh, but awarded to the St. Louis Browns.

"I believe some good will come out of the Sisler case," Dreyfuss said, "because it may lead to a reorganization of the national commission. I intend to fight for this, as I can't see why any club owner in either major league should be placed in a position where he can say that his own club shall or shall not have a certain player. I intend to fight for the elimination of Herrmann from the commission."

He said if awarded Sisler the Pirates would trade him.

WASEDA BEATEN BY MAROONS, 7-1, AS 7,000 LOOK ON

BY MAROON.

The Maroons won the opening game of the third international series with Waseda University of Japan, 7 to 1, at Stagg field yesterday. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the university was celebrated by a parade of all the classes since 1891, and circus events by the fraternities and campus clubs. President Judson of the university threw the first ball to the Japanese consul, Kurusu. Seven thousand persons were in the stands when the game started.

The Japs were saved from a shutout when Shortstop Kato whaled a home run to the fence in the fifth. Aside from the circuit swat the orientals could not solve George's delivery. Kishi started wildly on the slab, and erratic throwing by his teammates gave the Maroons most of their runs. The visitors covered their positions well, but did not exhibit strength of arms or hitting ability, nor did they take any chances on the bases. Score:

NOTRE DAME DROPS STARS FOR PLAYING ON 'PRO' TEAM.

Notre Dame, Ind., June 3.—[Special.]—The Notre Dame athletic stars, James Walsh, one of the leading pitchers, and Jerry Jones, monogram football man and hard hitting outfielder on the varsity nine, were barred from future athletic competition at Notre Dame by the faculty board of athletic control today. Walsh and Jones are charged with playing with a Michigan City team at Laporte, Ind., Memorial day.

The charges were brought up a few days ago, and the two stars were prevented from participating in the games with the Michigan Aggies and Michigan at Lansing and Ann Arbor.

WORLD'S HURDLE MARK HUNG UP BY SIMPSON

Dismond Ties Meredith's Time in Quarter Mile; Smith Also Star.

ILLINI 2D, MAROONS 3D

Photographs of the principal performers in the conference meet will be found on page 4 of this section.

BY WALTER H. ECKERSALL.

With an evenly balanced team of athletes, which scored points in eleven of the sixteen events, the University of Wisconsin yesterday won the sixteenth annual track and field meet of the Western Intercollegiate Athletic association held on Northwestern field with a total of 49 points. University of Illinois was second with 35¾ points and University of Chicago third with 30¾ markers.

One world's record was broken, one tied, and seven conference marks went by the boards. The first mark to be broken was in the 120 yard high hurdles, when Robert Simpson of Missouri leaped the barriers in :14 3-5, which equaled the record he made last Saturday in the Missouri Valley conference meet. The mark was not allowed because Simpson was favored by a strong wind, but his mark of yesterday no doubt will be official.

Simpson Repeats in Low Hurdles.

Not content with winning the high hurdles, Simpson repeated by winning the 220 yard low sticks in easy fashion and established a new conference record of :23 4-5 for the distance. Simpson held the former mark at :24 3-5. He got away to a good start and breasted the tape a winner by fully ten yards.

The next mark to fall was in the quarter mile, when Binga Dismond of the University of Chicago footed the distance in :47 2-5, which equals the record made by Ted Meredith of the University of Pennsylvania and made in the eastern intercollegiate meet a week ago. This performance is only two-fifths of a second slower than the world's mark held by Maxey Long and made on the straightaway in 1900.

Mucks Breaks Discus Mark.

The next record broken was in the discus throw, when Arlie Mucks of Wisconsin hurled the saucer shaped missle 155 feet 2 inches, which bettered the former mark of 140 feet 2⅜ inches made by Johnny Garrels of Michigan in 1905. The big fellow bettered the former mark on each of his preliminary attempts, while he made his best throw on his second trial in the semi-final round.

D. M. Scott of the Mississippi Agricultural college then ran the half mile in 1:53 1-5, which clipped two-fifths of a second off the mark established by Leroy Campbell of the University of Chicago at Urbana last year. The southerner led from start to finish and had plenty of speed in reserve at the tape.

Two Mile Record to Stout.

Capt. Stout of Chicago was the next performer to breast the tape in a record breaking performance. He sped the two miles in 9:29 3-5, which broke the former mark of 9:33 2-5, held by A. H. Mason of the University of Illinois. Mason ran in the event, but his best efforts were spent in the mile, which he won in 4:20 1-5.

To Carman Smith of the University of Wisconsin went the individual honors. The Badger won thirteen points as a result of victories in the 100 and 220 yard dashes and finishing in second place in the running broad jump. Robert Simpson of Missouri was second, witth 10½ points.

After H. B. Liversedge of the University of California had won the shot put and established a new record of 47 feet 5 inches and had taken third place in the javelin throw, he was disqualified by the conference eligibility committee and the points taken away from the western institution. The action was taken after it was learned that the weight man had competed for the Olympic A. C. of San Francisco in open competition.

Disqualification Arouses Ire.

L. A. Nichols of the University of California, who won the running high jump, suffered the same fate after he had tied the conference record at 6 feet 1½ inches. As a result of the board's action, California was deprived of ten points. Coach Walter Curtis was bitter in his comments on the action of the committee, and it is doubtful if the westerners will ever again take part in the conference.

Three thousand fans flocked to Northwestern field and saw some of the greatest foot racing ever staged on a local track. The athletes performed according to the dope, with the result that the races were featured by keen competition.

Track in Good Condition.

Director Lewis Omer of Northwestern had the track in splendid condition and the scene was set for a series of record breaking performances.

The attendance, about 2,000, was not disappointing, considering the counter attraction of the "Preparedness parade." The managing committee would have preferred to change the date and postpone the events, but was unable to do so. The parade was a Chicago affair, while a majority of the competing athletes were from outside the city. Final examinations and commencement exercises precluded any change in the plans. The University of California men likewise were opposed to any change.

THREE RIVAL CAPTAINS END COLLEGE CAREERS

Three Big Nine track captains, rivals in distance events, ran their last college races yesterday. Two ended their varsity competition in comparative disappointment.

Dow Harvey led the champion Badgers, but was beaten in the half mile, his favorite event, by Scott of Mississippi Aggies, an unknown before he broke the 880 mark at Evanston.

Mike Mason of Illinois won the mile after a stiff tussle, but placed fourth in the two mile, a race he has won with consistency in his previous competition. He was considered by Illini adherents as a certain victor in both distance runs.

Joe Stout of the Maroons was the only one of the trio to exceed expectations. Stout had been the under dog in contests with Harvey and Mason throughout his athletic career, but his new record of 9:29 3-5 in the two mile was one of the best performances of the meet.

Speaker Scores Three Runs and Hits in Four—Boston Protests Game.

Cleveland, O., June 3.—Cleveland went into first place again by defeating Boston, 11 to 2. Cleveland drove Leonard from the slab and also hit Pennock hard, gathering fourteen hits for twenty-seven bases. Speaker made a sacrifice fly, a double, and two triples, scored three runs, and drove in four others.

The game was delayed seventeen minutes by arguments in the third inning. Umpire Chill had interfered with Turner reaching second. He ruled Turner was entitled to the base, then reversed himself and called Turner out, but finally compromised by allowing the runner to remain on first base, whereupon Manager Carrigan of Boston announced he played the game under protest. No run was scored in that inning. Score:

UMPIRE BRENNAN SIGNS TO WORK IN THREE EYES.

Bill Brennan, who was chief of the umpire staff of the Federal league for the seasons of 1914 and 1915, but who wasn't taken care of when the big peace agreement went into effect last spring, has been hired by President Tearney of the Three Eyes league and will start work today in Davenport. Bill reached Chicago yesterday, coming from New York, and came to terms with Tearney before noon. It is the plan to send him all over the Three Eeyes circuit at once, making one day stands. His schedule calls for eight different cities in eight days.

Brennan, who has a contract with the defunct Federal league, the contract to expire at the close of this season, still has hopes of getting a settlement of some kind, but can't pick out anybody to sue for the money. In the meantime he figures he might as well work, even if it is a minor league job.

SCHMALSTIG FILES REPLY TO TAFT ON CUB STOCK.

Cincinnati, O., June 3.—[Special.]—Charles Schmalstig filed his reply today to the answer of Charles P. Taft to the former's suit for $55,555.55, based on the purchase of stock of the Chicago National league baseball club from C. W. Murphy. Taft's answer stated he purchased stock for Schmalstig, allowing him to pay for it out of dividends, which amounted to 110 per cent the first year.

Schmalstig denies that all payments on a promissory note of $10,576 made for the purchase of 100 shares were made out of dividends. He said he became the owner of stock upon his own offer of purchase and not on any voluntary offer by Taft.

Razor blade magnified 430 diameters. This blade has been rusted by the moisture of the air, and must be re-ground to get a good shave from it.

SAVING FACES —THAT'S WHAT EDG-ER-EEN —DOES

Edg-Er-Een takes all the after smart out of shaving.
Edg-Er-Een eliminates the cause of "pull" in razor blades.
Razor blades pull because the moisture of the air forms rust on the tiny teeth, and causes them to break off and form a harsh, rough edge—even on new or freshly sharpened blades.
Razor blades in this condition, jabbed into the skin, cause smarting, irritation and other facial troubles. The scratches admit disease germs.
By preventing the formation of rust, Edg-Er-Een prevents all these troubles. Edg-Er-Een saves faces.
Edg-Er-Een saves blades, too—no rust can eat into them—no quick wearing away is possible, stropping is unnecessary.
Know perfect shaving comfort—begin using Edg-Er-Een today.

GREAT SUPPORT FOR ALEXANDER BEATS ST. LOUIS

Cards Swat Great One, but Mates Come to His Rescue in 2 to 0 Contest.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 3.—Sensational fielding by Stock, Whitted, Niehoff, and Paskert enabled Philadelphia to defeat St. Louis, 2 to 0. Alexander was hit much harder than Meadows, who twirled the first seven innings for the visitors, but wonderful support saved the former from being scored on. Score:

INQUISITIVE FANS

Cherokee, Ia.—[Sporting Editor.]—[1] A batter hits safely to center field and the ball comes to the center fielder on the ground. He either fumbles it or lets the ball go through him, so that the runner goes to second. Should the fielder be charged with an error? [2] Should an outfielder be charged an error if by throwing home to catch a runner he throws wide of the plate and the runner scores on what would have been an easy out if the fielder had pegged straight to the catcher? [3] Should an outfielder be charged an error if a batter hits safely and the outfielder does not return the ball soon enough to keep the batsman from getting an extra base? J. K. K.

These are all matters of opinion, left to the scorer's judgment by the rules. The general practice in the major leagues follows: [1] Yes, if the fielder gets in front of the ball and it does not take a freak bound. [2] Not unless another runner thereby gets an extra base. [3] No.

Chicago.—[Sporting Editor.]—[1] With bases unoccupied the pitcher makes a balk. Can the batter go to first on the balk? [2] When there are men on bases can the batter go to first on a balk? [3] Can the pitcher make a legal ball with no one on base? W. SEYFERLICH.

There are nine kinds of balks. Some of them count as called balls for the batsman when the bases are empty. On all kinds of balks each base runner advances one base, but the batsman does not take first on a balk, although it is possible for him to get a base on balls on a balk.

H. G. Goodman, Chicago—A fast ball.

Abe Roberts, Springfield, Ill.—This paper does not decide bets.

Chicago.—[Sporting Editor.]—Last half of ninth, two down and a ball and a strike on the batsman. The next ball was batted violently, striking outside the base line a few feet from home plate, then going so that first baseman fielded it so far in the infield that he reached first base ahead of the runner with difficulty. Umpire in chief declared it a fair hit, in accordance with rule 44. Side at bat insisted it was a foul ball, because it first struck foul territory. Who was right? M. H. K.

The umpire was right. Where a batted ball first hits the ground does not matter except when it goes beyond first or third base on the fly. How many times have you seen a ball bunted to fair ground roll outside the line and become a foul?

Chicago.—[Sporting Editor.]—Runner on first tries to steal second, and in throwing to second base the catcher hits the umpire with the ball. Is the runner entitled to second base or should he return to first? R. W.

The ball remains in play, and the runner can advance at his own risk as far as he likes, just as if the ball had hit a player.

WOMEN APPLAUD AS KID HOWARD BOOSTS BOXING

Manager of Ever Hammer Wins Friends for Ring Sport in Theater Talk.

BY RAY C. PEARSON.

Not long ago at a Chicago theater Ever Hammer, the Chicago lightweight, played an engagement in which he demonstrated the blows which he uses in his boxing contests. But this demonstration wasn't the big thing of the show by a long ways. The biggest thing was a speech by Hammer's manager, Howard Carr, better known as Kid Howard. The Kid has some ideas about the boxing game which are strictly his own, as will be seen by what follows later. Also the same Kid has a good sense of observation.

Howard signed for the engagement just about a week before it started, and in that week he spent most of his time with a tailor being dolled up for the stage work. He purchased three suits of clothes (one of them a Ford, so called because nearly everybody has one of them), a dozen or so of bright colored cravats, and all the other stuff that go to make a "well dressed young man." Besides looking nice he wanted to make an impression, and that impression he wanted to make principally with the fair sex at the theater. There was a reason why the Kid wanted to make the hit with the suffragets.

Remarks Win Over Women.

In the week before appearing before the footlights and while increasing his wardrobe he wrote and rehearsed the speech which he intended springing on his audience. And what do you think he did? He wrote a speech meant exclusively for the women folks and sprinkled it quite extensively with big words to show that he had some vocabulary. He didn't give the men folks much attention, but he accomplished his purpose, for when he had finished talking there was vociferous applause, even more so than that accorded Hammer, who many believe is going to be lightweight champion of the world before very long.

"Ladies and gentlemen," began the Kid, then he started to talk to the suffragets. "I wish to call your attention to the athletic sport of boxing. This sport has been severely criticized at times because there have been many who believed it rough and even brutal. It is not the women folks who have taken exception to boxing; it has been some of the men folks—most of those who never have seen a contest—who have been responsible for the attacks on the sport.

"Boxing is clean athletic entertainment and should be encouraged, and I believe the women should do their part in encouraging it. We need boxing in Illinois to make strong, healthful young men who will be able to defend themselves physically at all times, and the aid of the women is just the thing that will bring it about. And we will have champions then of whom everybody may be proud."

Kid's Suffraget Philosophy.

If any one thinks that Kid Howard didn't make a hit sartorially and oratorically, that doubting person should have heard the applause delivered by the women, and the men strung right along to make it all the more noisy. Hammer's manager thinks he pulled the greatest trick of his life in going after the suffragets, for he says: "All you have to do to get the men in line is to get the women first."

"If I'm not mistaken," said the Kid a couple of days ago, "the boxing game is coming back strong. I've got my own ideas of the sport and the sooner people get away from the idea that it is brutal and all that sort of thing, the better it will be for athletics. It is the people who don't know what boxing is who condemn it. A lot of men who never have seen a contest between two well trained athletes insist on terming it a prize fight, because they are under the impression that when two boys get into a ring they attempt to commit murder. Nothing ever was farther from the truth.

Boxing Test of Skill.

"For instance there are not a few who believe that in a ring match the contestants enter the combat bearing malice and with intent to disable or injure one another. That's just what a boxing contest is not. A boxing match is nothing more than a contest of skill just as is seen in nearly any athletic event. There is no feeling of hate between rivals of the ring any more than in any other contest. Naturally everybody wants to win and will employ all tactics in the effort to be returned the victor.

"Of course there are times in a boxing contest, when a boxer is being outpointed or losing a contest, when he will lose his temper and display evidence of anger, but that happens in any sport. Even in a game of cards between friends that frequently happens, but no one ever used malice or anger as an argument in favor of stopping the game of cards."

The Kid surely has some argument, and now that the suffragets have the vote he is playing to them strong, for he believes that with the support of the women the game of fisticuffs will gain in favor.

Larney Deprecates Roughness.

Larney Lichtenstein, manager of Ad Wolgast, former lightweight champion, and a couple of other boxers, is another manager who thinks that the criticism so often aimed at boxing is unjust. Anybody to talk with Larney wouldn't pick him out as a person identified with a "brutal" sport. Even his conversation isn't loud enough to make any one think of anything more noisy than a gentle zephyr. One of the things that Larney can't understand is why people so often insist on calling a boxing contest a prize fight.

OFFER FRED WELSH $8,000.

Denver, Colo., June 3.—An offer of $8,000 has been made to Freddie Welsh, lightweight champion, for a twenty round boxing match with Ad Wolgast here July 4. It was announced today by Denver promoters.

EVANSTON HIGH LOSES GAME TO ACADEMY, 10-0

Last Batter in Ninth Robs Cram of No Hit Game—Zulfer Leads Attack.

Evanston academy scored the first success in the battle for the north shore prep championship by defeating the Evanston High school team, 10 to 0, at Northwestern field yesterday. Cram pitched a remarkable game, holding the losers to a single hit, which was made by Hellstrom after two down in the ninth inning. Three other high schoolers reached first, two on errors and another on a walk. Zulfer featured in the attack with a timely double and a triple. Score:

For PLAYERS of WHIST

by A. R. METCALFE

WHEN to cover an honor is one of the most perplexing problems in auction.

As a general proposition, second hand should cover if there is any prospect of making a card good either in his hand or his partner's. For instance, suppose dummy to hold jack, nine, two, and the next player king, six, four. Should the jack be led from dummy, the next player should put on the king in the hope of making a ten good for his partner on the third round. Should dummy, however, hold jack, ten and a small card, the remaining cards could not be arranged so that the next player would gain by playing the king.

Carl Ehrlermann, in his clever booklet, "Neglected Points of Auction Bridge," gives many illustrations of this play.

Not less interesting is the play of the declarer in these cases, as the following deal will illustrate.

The hands:

West secured nine tricks.

At trick 2 the chief concern of west was to get rid of a probable entry card in spades held by south. The 9 of spades slipped by the watchful eye of north, while had the knave been led north would certainly have gone up with the king and led his other club, which would have given north and south the odd trick.

In general the declarer when he wants second hand to cover should lead the top of a sequence and should play the bottom of the sequence when he wishes to pass second hand. West played well at trick 11 and earned his final score.

ED CRUMP WINS RICH HANDICAP AT LOUISVILLE

Louisville, Ky., June 3.—[Special.]—Ed Crump, John W. Schorr's Peep O'Day colt, captured the fourth running of the rich Kentucky handicap this afternoon at Douglas park with a good length to spare over the champion Roamer. Water Witch, a rank outsider, snatched show position by a head from Hodge, the Kentucky crack. The time, 2:04 3-5, was disappointing, as the track was like lightning and it was believed Luke McLuke's record would go by the boards, but the race was run two full seconds behind the record.

Roamer, Andrew Miller's grand little gelding, proved himself game to the core, but the heavy impost told on him in his run to the wire and Ed Crump slipped through on the rail. Roamer swerved badly, but made a game finish.

Borrow Trails at Finish.

The Whitney stable proved a big disappointment, Borrow pulling a beaten disgraced last. Borrow went to the front at the six furlong pole, but before turning into the stretch Roamer had him soundly beaten and he retired fast.

Trainer Goldsborough was not confident Roamer would win. He said before the race that if he could have gotten one good workout on the local course with Roamer there would be no question of the result. The Schorr entry was the choice by a small margin over Roamer and Borrow.

Jockey Garner rode a fine race on the winner. Butwell showed his class on Roamer, though he did not win.

Summaries of Races.

First race, 6 furlongs—Mary H., 98 [Louder], $56.80, $13, $4 won; Port Light, 103 [Shilling], $4.60, $2.90, second; Droll, 109 [Goose], $2.50, third. Time, 1:12 4-5. Resign and Blanchita ran.

Second race, 5½ furlongs—Rosewood, 112 [Murphy], $15.70, $5.70, and $3.30, won; America, 112 [Martin], $5.70 and $3.50, second; Walter H. Pearce, 115 [Goose], $2.40, third. Time, 1:07 3-5. Velvet Joe, Bonnie Lassie, Glorine, Fizer, Dreadnought, Phocian, and Al. M. Dick ran.

Third race, 1 1-16 miles—Grasmere, 110 [Murphy], $4.40, $3.20, $2.60, won; Jessie Louise, 114 [Mechan], $4.80, $3.50, second; Charles Francis, 109 [Goose], $3.60, third. Time, 1:46 3-5. Louise Paul, Big Todo, and Howdy Howdy also ran.

Fourth race, 6 furlongs—Leo Skolny, 97 [Connolly], $22.70, $7.20, $4.20, won; Chalmers, 120 [Goose], $3.70, $2.70, second; Bringhurst, 120 [Garner], $3.40, third. Time, 1:11 3-5. Conning Tower, Solar Star, and Dr. Larrick also ran.

Fifth race, Kentucky handicap, $10,000 added, for 3 year olds and up, 1¼ miles—Ed Crump, 121 pounds [G. Garner], $12.60, $5.70, $1.10, won; Roamer, 132 [Butwell], $8.10, $5.90, second; Water Witch, 105 [Goose], $5.50, third. Time, 2:04 3-5. Dick Williams, Royal II., Old Koenig, Marion Goosby, Borrow, Hank O'Day, Waterblossom, and Hodge also ran.

Sixth race, 1 1-16 miles—Billows, 109 pounds [Shilling], $11.20, $5.40, $3.30, won; Little Bigger, 95 [Henry], $8.80, $4.50, second; Thanksgiving, 94 [Louder], $5.30, third. Time, 1:47 3-5. Virgie Dot, Booker Bill, Commaurette, and World's Wonder also ran.

Seventh race, 1 1-16 miles—Brooks, 96 pounds [Gentry], $21.80, $8, $3.90 won; Guide Post, 109 [Goose], $3.60, $2.40, second; Olga Star, 113 [Stearns], $3.50, third. Time, 1:46 1-5. Bonanza, Industry, and McAdoo also ran.

LES DARCY FLOORS CROUSE IN SECOND ROUND OF CLASH.

Les Darcy, the Australian middleweight champion, made quick work of Buck Crouse of Pittsburgh when he toppled the Pittsburgh battler in the second round of their scheduled twenty round contest. This information was given in a cablegram yesterday from Sydney, Australia, the scene of the combat. A crowd of 15,000 persons saw the scrap. Crouse did not have a chance at any time, and it was evident that the finish would be an early one.

Culver, Ind., June 3.—[Special.]—Culver Military academy team won the final ball game from Morgan Park academy, 7 to 1.

HIGH NOON TAKES FEATURE OF CARD AT BELMONT PARK

New York, June 3.—[Special.]—James Butler's Voter-Noonday colt High Noon again proved himself a sprinter of high quality when he conceded weight to all the other half dozen starters and galloped away with the Toboggan handicap, the feature of the card at Belmont park.

High Noon's victory created one record, as he is the only horse to have won this handicap twice since it has been run at Belmont park. As a 3 year old last year High Noon carried 100 pounds to victory, while today he picked up 124 pounds.

First race, 3 year olds, selling, 6 furlongs—School Boy, 116 [Loftus], 6 to 1, 7 to 5, and 2 to 5, won; Emden, 105 [Lykes], 1 to 2, out, and out, second; Keziah, 105 [J. McTaggart], 10 to 1, 5 to 2, and even, third. Time, 1:12 4-5. Eleanor and Dr. Grener ran.

Second race, handicap, 3 year olds and up, 1 1-16 miles—Flying Fairy, 117 [T. McTaggart], 8 to 1, 8 to 5, and out, won; Wood Ward, 100 [Garner], 6 to 1, 8 to 5, and out, second; Sharpshooter, 110 [Davies], 3 to 4, out, and out, third. Time, 1:46 1-5. Holiday ran.

Third race, the Fashion stakes, $3,500 added, 2 year old fillies, 5 furlongs—Koh-I-Noor, 113 pounds [Davies], 7 to 20, out and out, won; Pleasant Dreams, 109 [Buxton], 6 to 1, 11 to 10, and 1 to 3, second; Triple Crown, 112 [McCahey], 6 to 1, 6 to 5, and 2 to 5, third. Time, 1:00. Ginger Snap II. and Idle Hour also ran.

Fourth race, Toboggan handicap, 6 furlongs—High Noon, 124 pounds [Loftus], 9 to 5, 7 to 10, 1 to 4, won; Benevolent, 106 [Fairbrother], 12 to 1, 5 to 1, 5 to 2, second; Phosphor, 115 [Davies], 2 to 1, 7 to 10, 1 to 4, third. Time, 1:10 4-5. Gillies, Hanson, Fenmouse, and Tea Caddy also ran.

Fifth race, 1 mile—Sam McMeekin, 116 pounds [Haynes], 2 to 1, 3 to 5, out, won; Sasin, 106 [Taplin], even, 1 to 3, out, second; Ambrose, 104 [Lykes], 7 to 1, 2 to 1, 4 to 5, third. Time, 1:41 1-5. Springmass, Flagday, and Charmeuse also ran.

Sixth race, 2 year olds, 5 furlongs—Kathryn Gray, 110 pounds [Washear], 8 to 5, 1 to 2, out, won; Gloomy Gus, 112 [Garner], 8 to 5, 1 to 2, out, second; Mae Murray, 109 [Taplin], 5 to 2, 3 to 5, out, third. Time, 1:00. Moon Lighter also ran.

OLDFIELD TRIES FOR WORLD AUTO MARK TODAY

Veteran Will Attempt Two Miles in Minute at Speedway; Other Stars Practice.

BY J. C. BURTON.

Preparedness parade marchers will be given an opportunity to take a load off their aching feet and get an eyeful of thrills at Speedway park this afternoon when practice for Saturday's auto Derby will be featured by Barney Oldfield's attempt to break the world's two mile record and crowd the distance within a fleeting minute.

Chaperoned by Ray Dashback, Oldfield's mechanician, the front drive Christy, with which Barney will go after the record today, and the French Delage, at the wheel of which the veteran will chase prize money Saturday, arrived from Indianapolis yesterday morning. The cars were driven to the speedway and put in shape during the afternoon.

If Barney betters the world's record of 118 miles an hour, established by Chassagne's Sunbeam at Brooklands in 1913, he will receive $1,000, and should he cover the two miles in one minute or less he will be given an additional purse of $1,500, making a profitable Sunday for him.

Friends Confident of Success.

Those who saw Oldfield circle the Indianapolis track at an average of 102 miles an hour last Saturday are confident that he will be successful in his attempt to break the world's record this afternoon, provided the venerable Christy does not disintegrate under him and scatter cylinders, pistons, connecting rods and other vital parts all over the course.

As the drivers who practice today will receive 25 per cent of the gate receipts, probably most of the speed kings will be out to display their talents and annex some easy money. Starter Wagner also hopes to qualify two or three cars, so there will not be so many in the eliminations which start Tuesday.

The drivers caught the preparedness fever that was raging in the loop yesterday and worked on their cars in the garages. Several pilots were on the course, including Ralph De Palma, Mercedes; Josef Christiaens, Sunbeam; Dario Resta, Peugeot, and Ira Vail, Hudson. None of them opened up, being content to limber up their mounts and save high speed until today.

Elgin Race Set for Aug. 19.

At a meeting of the Elgin Road Racing association, held yesterday, it was decided to limit the Watch City meet this year to one race which will be held on Saturday, Aug. 19. The distance will be 300 miles and the prize money will total $10,000, an increase of $4,000 over the purses given for two events last season. The Elgin National trophy will be awarded the winner.

In order to raise the purse, a committee of four, headed by E. H. Krueger, secretary of the Elgin Commercial club, was appointed to sell $10,000 worth of tickets during the present week. The campaign for funds starts tomorrow and $700 already has been subscribed.

This year's Elgin race will be an A. A. A. championship event and the place winners will be credited with points that will figure in the award of the Bosch trophy and a $13,500 purse at the close of the 1916 season.

C. A. C. Promotes Elgin Race.

The Elgin road race will be the only professional contest of the season that will be promoted by the Chicago Automobile club, as the Plymouth court organization will not be identified with Saturday's motor derby as it was last year.

The break between the C. A. C. and the officials of the Speedway Park association is the result of the alleged apathy shown toward the amateur race last month by a certain faction in the automobile club and the refusal last August of the C. A. C. to take charge of the 100 mile challenge race because liability insurance was not secured for the event.

The speedway officials claim the automobile club this year has not taken the interest in the board track that it should, and further state that the Chicago speedway is a civic proposition and not one but all the city's organizations should be identified with the promotion of races held there. All the officials for next Saturday's classic are members of the automobile club, however.

MURRAY OF STANFORD TEAM STAR IN N. Y. A. C. GAMES.

New York, June 3.—At Travers Island-on-the-Sand, where the New York Athletic club held its annual track and field games today, collegians from Leland Stanford Jr. University were prominent in several of the events. Fred Murray, the Intercollegiate champion hurdler, won the 120 yards hurdle handicap from Scratch in 15 2-5—which is a new record for this track.

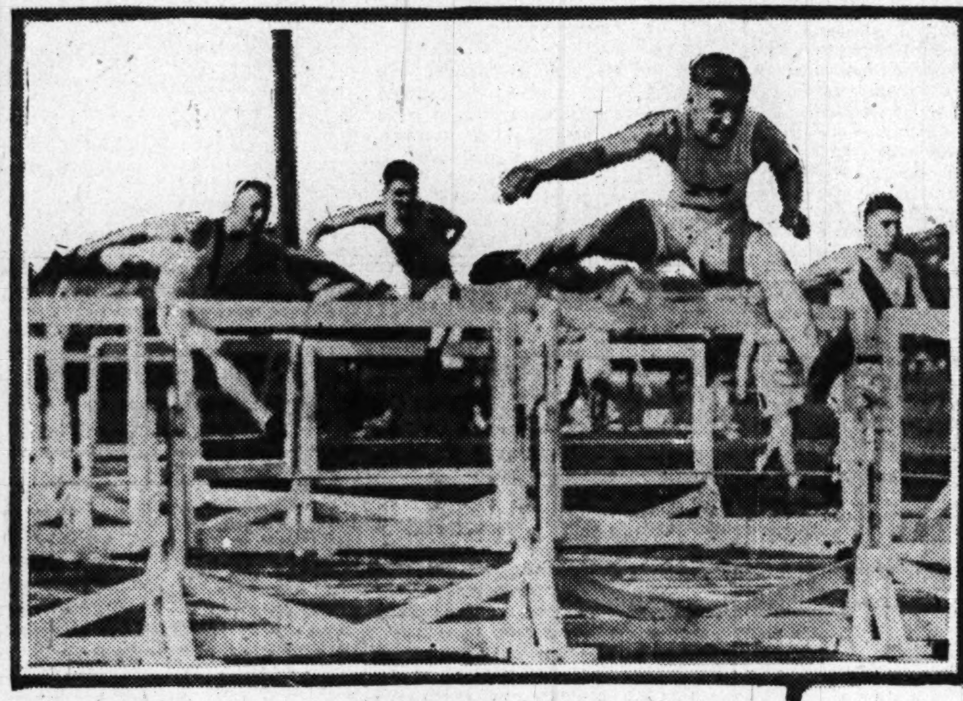
Murray also won the 16 pound shotput handicap in which he had an allowance of six feet, with an actual put of 42 feet 1 1-8 inches. He was not so successful, however, in the 200 yards low hurdles, a scratch event which was called "the Golden West special." In this contest Murray fell over the first hurdle, but finished third. The winner was J. K. Norton, with M. J. House, also of Leland Stanford, in second place. The time was: 25 1-5.

From the nine yard mark, F. A. Lynn of Stanford was first home in the 440 yards handicap in: 49 4-5. Ted Meredith was the scratch man, but he failed to finish among the first three, the winner being James M. Roche, of New Haven A. A. with an allowance of twelve yards.

BLIND TEAMS TIE IN MEET.

Watertown, Mass., June 3.—Blind athletes from the Overbrook School for the Blind, Philadelphia, were tied with those of the Perkins institute of this city in a track meet held on the Perkins field today. Each team scored 31½ points.

TRACK ATHLETES WHO BROKE OR EQUALED "BIG NINE" RECORDS YESTERDAY



Simpson, Missouri, leaping high hurdles to world mark.

Nichols, California, best in high jump, but disqualified.

Dismond, Chicago, equaling world record in 440 yard run.

In the Wake of the News

By RING W. LARDNER

THE DIARY OF A SIREN

MAY 31.

LENNIE has gone east with the nine and will not be back for three weeks and O diary how am I ever going to stand his absence as this is our first real seperation since he asked me for my hand. We have promised to write to each other twice a week and to think of each other every minute of the time we are apart, though such a promise on my part is not necessary, as I can think of nothing else but the big man who will some day call me his bride.

I have found out the name of the man who called me up and who smiled at me the day I was to the ball park and who would force his attentions on me were I not so firm in resisting his attentions. His name is Lou Tanner, and he was not taken east with the rest of the nine on account of him having a lame finger and unable to play ball. He called me up this morning to tell me that and to renew his plea that he might come and call, or take me out somewhere for an evening's amusement.

"No," I said firmly, "and I am surprised at you Mr. Tanner for trying to take advantage of Lennie's absence. It would not be fair to him were I to allow you to see me."

He is so persistent and his voice sounds so disappointed when I refuse his attentions that it is hard for me to be cold towards him, but my first duty is to Lennie who I have plighted my troth.

JUNE 2.

Diary it is late but I am not sleepy and I must write down this evening's events before I go to the land of dreams. He came to see me, tonight, diary, came without asking my permission. Little did I know who it was when the door bell rung and when I opened the door and seen him standing outside smiling I am afraid I blushed furiously for he said, "Keep it up. That color makes you look pretty."

"I must say you have your nerve, Mr. Tanner," I said frigidly. "Who gave you permission to come and call on me?"

"The mayor," he replied, and I could not repress a smile at his comical remark.

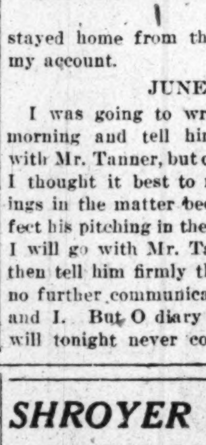
He took my smile as a smile of welcome and before I knew it he was in our apartment and had hung his hat on the hatrack.

"Well here I am," he said, "and I wish you would ask me to sit down."

"Common politeness demands me doing that," I replied, "but I wish you would explain your presence here."

"I came to see somebody," he replied smiling and again I was obliged to smile too, though I tried hard not to.

Well, he staid and talked and talked and O diary I must confess that it has been a pleasant evening and how nice he looked in his silk shirt, when he took off his coat because the evening was so warm. It was after 11, when he rose to go and then he said at parting, "Will you let me take you to one of the parks tomorrow night?" At first I said no, but finally I said: "It would not be fair to Lennie for me to go unknown to him and I will go on one condition that I write to Lennie tomorrow morning and tell him of my acquaintance with you and ask him if he objects." "Go ahead and ask him," he said, "but go with me tomorrow night anyway and I will promise you a good time." So I reluctantly consented but tomorrow morning I must write to Lennie the first thing and tell him everything.



I noticed that there was no bandage on Mr. Tanner's fingers and all of them looked to be all right. O diary I wonder if he stayed home from the eastern trip on my account.

JUNE 3.

I was going to write to Lennie this morning and tell him about my date with Mr. Tanner, but on second thoughts I thought it best to not rouse his feelings in the matter because it might effect his pitching in the games in the east. I will go with Mr. Tanner tonight and then tell him firmly that there must be no further communication between him and I. But O diary I am excited and will tonight never come?

GIRL SETS MARK FOR BALL THROW

Milwaukee, Wis., June 3.—[Special.]—The world's record for throwing a baseball by a girl, 227 feet, a figure established at Madison this spring, was broken today at Milwaukee Downer college, a school for girls, when Miss Elizabeth Faville of Lake Mills, kin of the late Chicago doctor, threw the ball 228 feet.

The throw was far below the figures she has established in practice, the college girls declaring she has achieved 240 feet in practice since reading of the Wisconsin girl's record.

To attain this record, Miss Faville had first to pass the new college record set today by Miss Alice Gronauer of Memphis, who was second in the finals. Miss Faville also broke the Downer record for the shotput and the basketball throw.

LA CROSSE NORMAL WINNER.

La Crosse, Wis., June 3.—La Crosse State Normal won the Normal conference meet today after a battle with Milwaukee. The locals' victory was due to Grausnick, who took individual honors by winning the 100, 220, and broad jump, and finishing third in the shotput for a total of 17½ points. He also led off the winning relay team. Townley, Milwaukee star, made 14½ points, and Ryan of La Crosse, picked to win the dashes, was third with 14¼. The standing of teams follows: La Crosse, 60½; Milwaukee, 42½; Stevens Point, 10; Superior, 4.

SHROYER TOPS PARK SHOOTERS

Shooters at the Sportsmen's club traps at Lincoln park held an after-the-parade competition yesterday, H. W. Shroyer winning the feature event, a 100 target contest for the Cort theater trophy. He cracked 96 birds at 16 yards rise. Distance handicaps varied from 16 to 20 yards. Thirteen got perfect scores in the twenty-five bird shoot. High totals:

100 target distance handicap—H. W. Shroyer [16 yards], 96; L. G. Kunzer [16], 95; J. Lino [19], 94; C. G. Burmeister [20], 94; Dr. Lewis [18], 92; Dr. Belknap [17], 91; W. S. Duvall [18], 90; E. E. Hall [19], 88; J. Coppersmith [17], 88; H. C. Wolf [18], 88.

QUAKER CREWS ON HUDSON.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 3.—The Pennsylvania crews arrived at their training quarters at Highland this afternoon and Coach Joe Wright had all three crews on the water for a four or five mile row. The varsity used its new shell for the first time and Coach Wright will keep the senior crew in the new boat after some adjustments have been made. The Columbia varsity and junior eights were sent over the four mile course tonight at a fast clip. No time was announced. The Cornell crews will arrive tomorrow and will have their first practice on the river Monday morning.

Eustis trophy—F. De Witt, 85—4—81; G. Hizer, 103—22—81; B. L. Rees, 108—27—81; H. B. Hollings, 94—12—82; E. F. Gaylord, 105—2—83; L. S. Kellogg, 96—11—85; B. O. Bourgeois, 105—20—85; O. N. Wakefield, 106—21—85.

A. V. Peterson and L. T. Freeman tied for the Carpenter prize and will toss for it. A. V. Petersen, L. T. Freeman, D. T. Mervine, and W. S. Fuller qualified for the All Star competition. Players who qualify in June will compete at match play in July, August, and September. H. H. Mitchell had low gross of 84 for yesterday.

U. HIGH GOLFERS WIN PREP TITLE; BEAT LA GRANGE

Take Honors by Two Points, Winning Third of Series at Flossmoor.

BY J. G. DAVIS.

In the closest finish ever staged in a local high school golf series University High defeated La Grange by two points in the Suburban High School championship, which finished yesterday at the Flossmoor Country club. U. High was first with 1,400 points, La Grange being second with 1,402, and New Trier third with 1,427. Oak Park and Evanston, which were tied at 1,058 at the end of the second series, did not appear yesterday.

La Grange was leading at the seventeenth hole, when only two scores remained to turn in. E. P. Clark of La Grange took seven for the last hole and this gave G. Newman of U. High, who was following, a six to tie. He put his third shot thirty feet from the hole and then ran down his putt, this feat giving his school the championship shield.

Honors to Jim Douglas.

Individual honors went to Jim Douglas of University High, who had scores of 79, 75, 88—242, made respectively at Skokie, Hinsdale, and Flossmoor. G. Whiteside of La Grange was second with [illegible]. Douglas received a gold medal. Yesterday's scores were as follows:

IMPORTANT GAMES TODAY IN TIGHT SOCCER RACE

With one of the tightest races in the history of local soccer leagues nearing its finish, games carded this afternoon are of exceptional interest. Joliet's win over Pullman last Sunday put these teams on even terms, while the Chicago Americans are close behind the leaders. Pullman will tackle the Chicago Americans at Pullman, and a defeat will practically put the Carbuilders out of the race, and the same applies to the Americans.

The Joliet men, who played wonderful football against Pullman last week, will tackle the Bricklayers at Thirty-fifth street and Wentworth avenue. Hyde Park Blues will play Campbell [illegible] at Fifty-second street and Cottage Grove avenue.

In the second division of the Chicago District league, Lincoln Park will meet Harvesters at McDuffs' field, [illegible] will meet the Caledonians at Ogden park, and Chicago Swedish will play at [illegible] field. All games start at 3 o'clock.

HYDE PARK TAKES BOTH PREP SOCCER TITLES

Following the lead of the Hyde Park heavies, who last week won the soccer series of the Chicago High School league, the school's lightweights yesterday won the championship of their division by getting a 0 to 0 tie with the Schurz eleven at the McDuffs' field. The tie gave the championship to the south side team by a margin of one point. Collins and Faust starred for Hyde Park and Weege for Schurz.

Lineup:

Hyde Park [0].		Schurz [0].
Collins	Goal	[illegible]
Le Goff	Right back	[illegible]
Faust	Left back	[illegible]
Windett	Right half back	[illegible]
Breegs	Cent. half back	[illegible]

FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH

REPRODUCTION OF A PAINTING BY SIR E. J. POYNTER

Every week The Sunday Tribune will reproduce in four colors on this page one of the world's most famously beautiful paintings. There will be a brief biography of the painter and a story of the painting. Herewith is reproduced another in the series.

By LOUISE JAMES BARGELT

"Faithful Unto Death." From the picture by Sir E. J. Poynter, Bart, P. R. A., in the Walker Art gallery, Liverpool. Size 45 by 29 inches. Exhibited at the Royal academy, 1865. Presented to the corporation of Liverpool in 1874 by Charles Langton Esq.

IN the year 79 A. D. on the shores of the Bay of Naples near to the foot of Mount Vesuvius stood the city of Pompeii. Already hundreds of years had passed since its founding, ascribed by Greek tradition to Heracles. It was a flourishing city, modern in many ways, possessed of broad streets, widespread buildings, stately mansions, and humble dwellings.

There were theaters of marble seating 4,000 and 5,000 people. There were temples of marble to the different gods of the Roman faith. There were public buildings where the affairs of state were carried on and on whose walls were various inscriptions which showed that if the women were not allowed to vote they at least took active interest in the concerns of their city. And there were public baths which have never since been equaled in their spaciousness and beauty.

Probably 20,000 people occupied the city in the year of its terrible destruction. A volcano which had been smoldering for years suddenly burst forth, carrying devastation to all the surrounding country and burying Herculaneum and Pompeii under a dense bed of ashes and cinders. Over 2,000 men, women, and children were buried alive. The rest escaped.

Centuries passed, generations came and went. Spasmodic, ineffectual efforts were made through the middle ages to search for the ruins. But for the most part the cities were forgotten. One hundred and fifty years ago the first excavations of a systematic nature were begun and fifty years ago real results were obtained.

Near the Herculaneum gate at Pompeii the past of 2,000 years ago yielded up strange secrets. The quality of the ashes from that terrible Vesuvian eruption had preserved, marvelously intact. a great part of the city's ancient civilization.

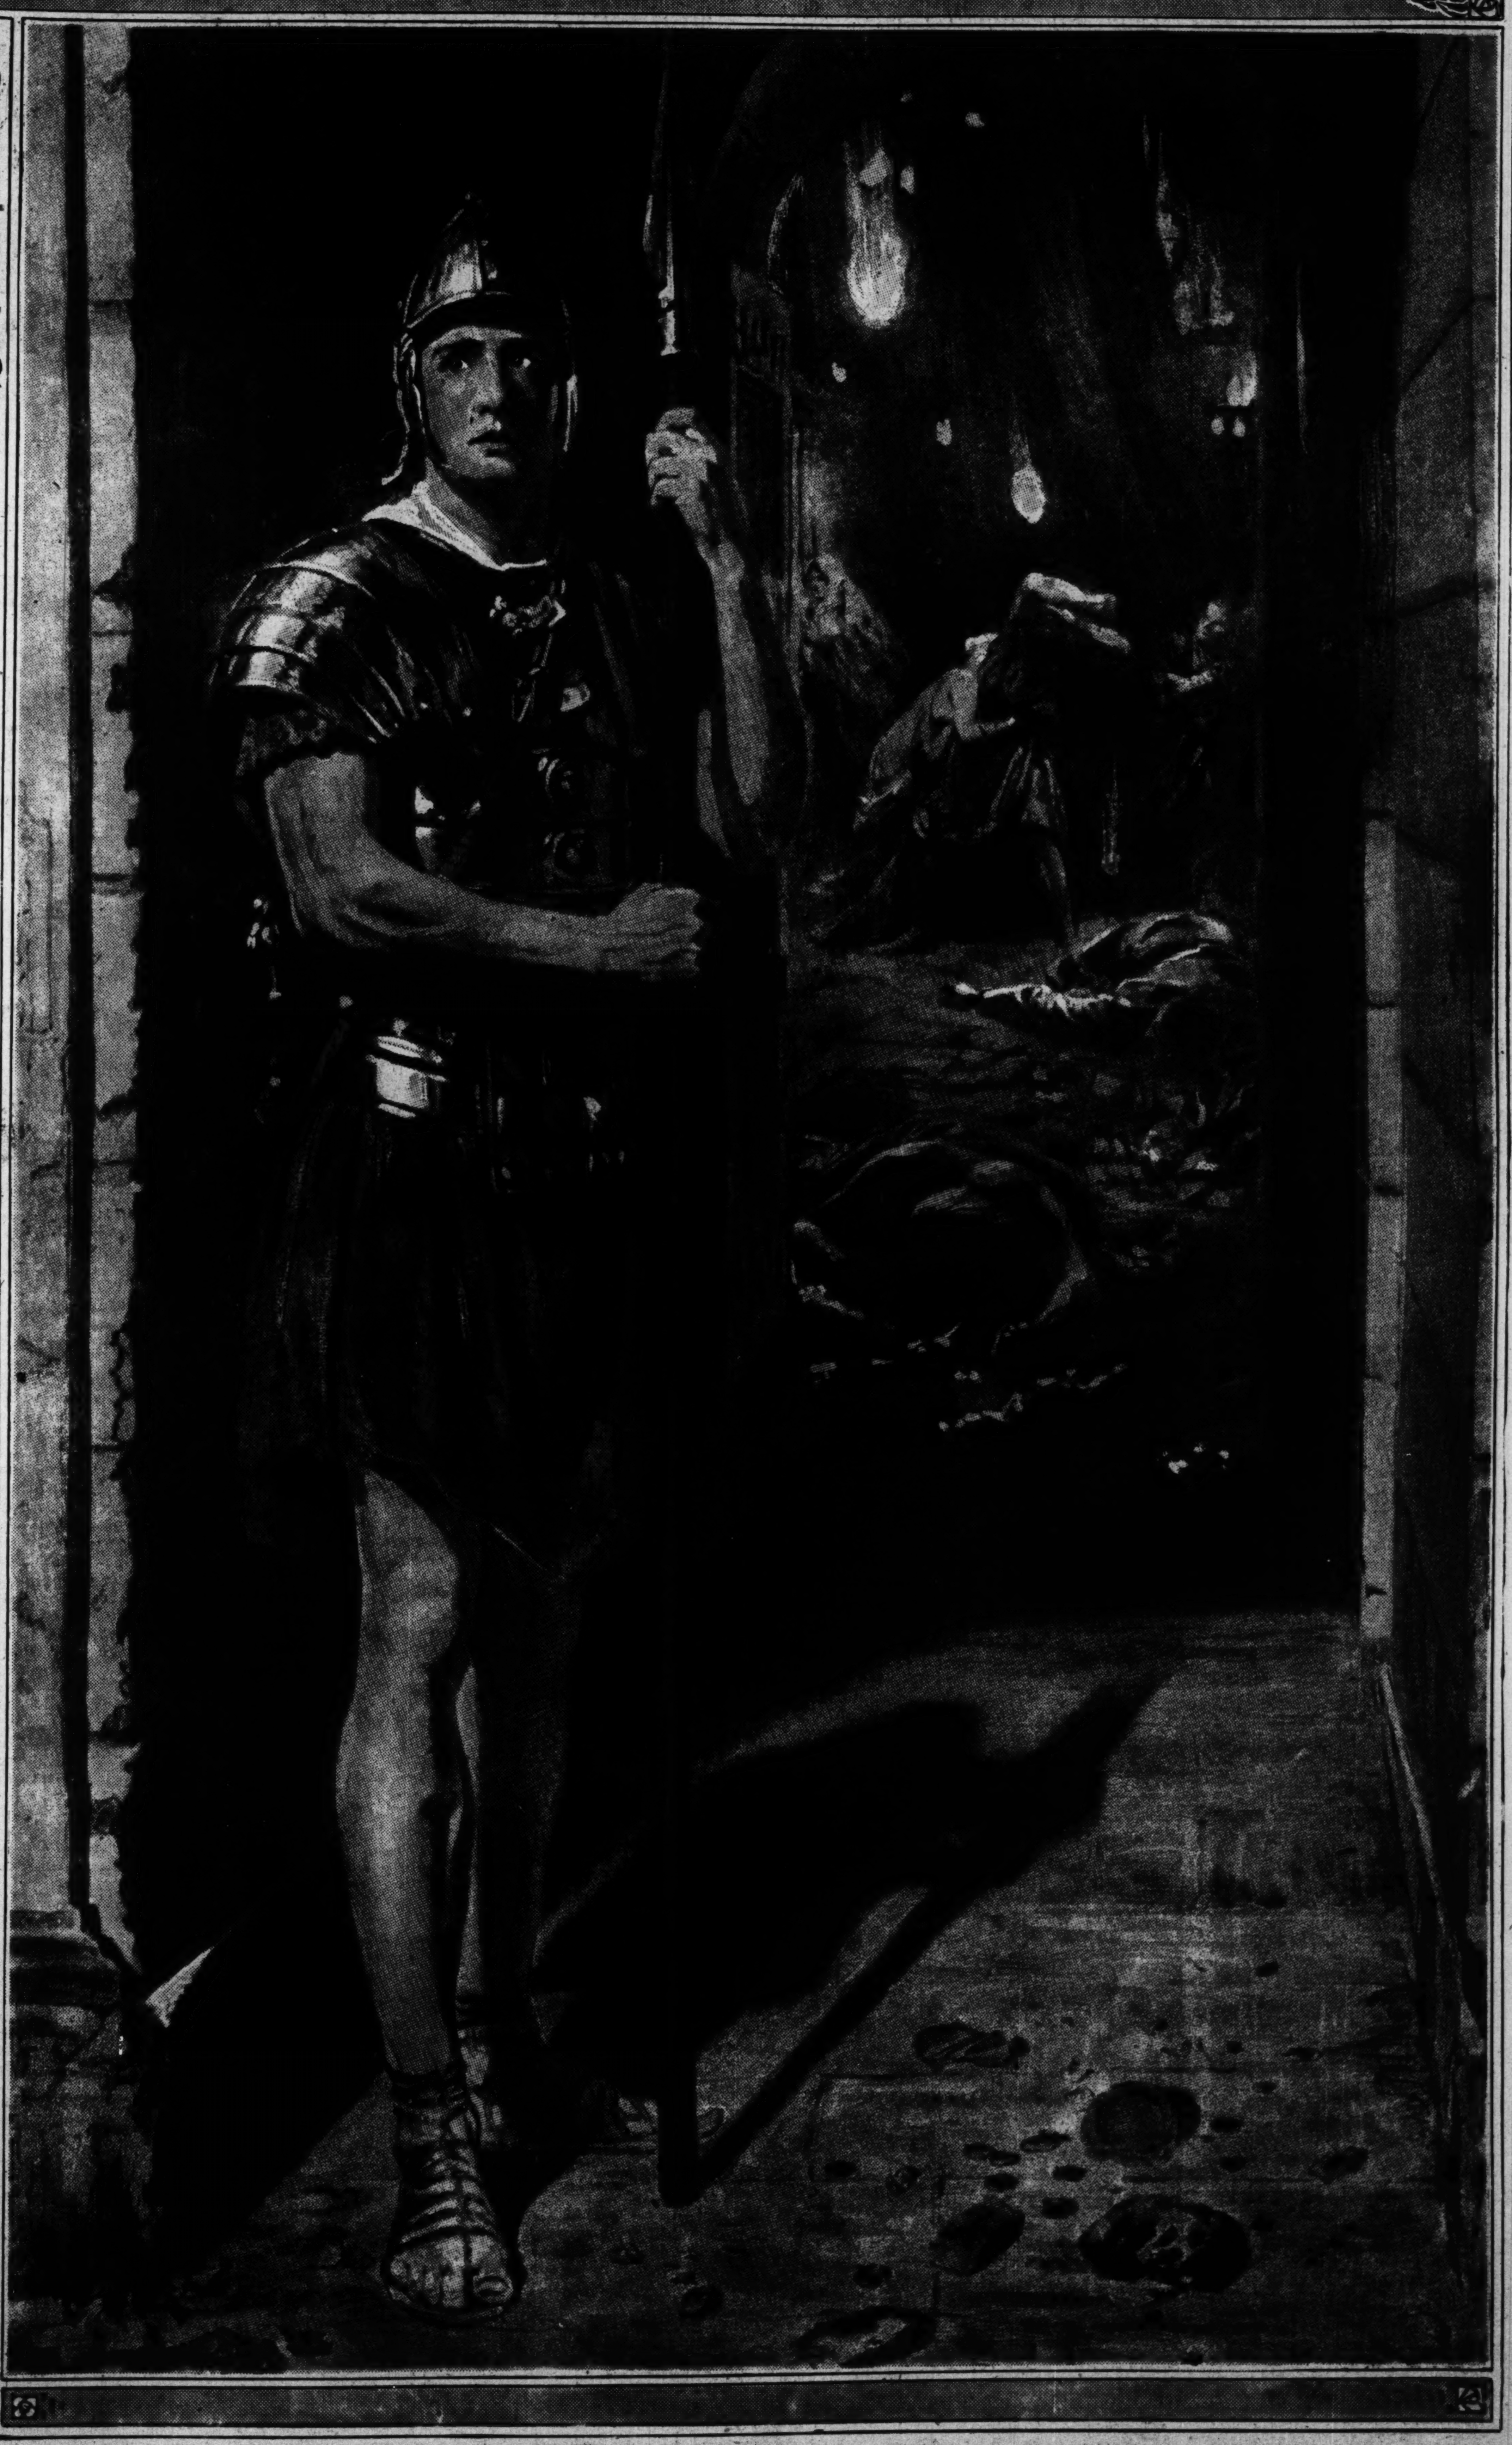
At the door of what had been one of Pompeii's richest suburban homes stood the skeleton of a soldier, erect, in full armor, faithful through the centuries to the post where he had been stationed. Around him were prostrate figures, struck down in their frantic fleeing to escape the ravaging flames. But he had been forgotten. In the awful mêlée of those moments no orders had been given him to leave. The discipline of Rome and her generations of the best trained soldiers the world has ever known was in his blood. He had been told to stand at the place appointed. He had but one duty and that was to obey.

Poynter has strongly visualized this long ago past in his painting. The place is suffused in a vast glow of color from the leaping flames. In the background the fleeing figures are rushing distractedly about. And standing out, above all the rest, is the straight form of the Roman sentry. He is alert, taut with the coming disaster, which he is realizing to the full. The veins in his hands and arms stand out painfully with the emotion which is surging through him. In his eyes there is an inscrutable expression of commingled feelings of quick remembrances and passionate abandonings.

It is a wonderful rendering of a brief instant in the life of a man. Every detail of the painting carries out the tensity of it all. Action combines to enhance the effect still further, and the whole, by the artist's masterly technique, is a strong portrayal of a Vesuvian calamity.

Sid Edward Poynter, Bart., P. R. A., has had a singularly successful life from earliest youth. The son of an architect, he was born in Paris in 1836 and studied under Gleyre. He exhibited his first picture at the Academy in 1861 and was elected an associate in 1869 and in 1876 Royal Academician. He has worked in almost every branch of art, including fresco, mosaic, stained glass, tile work, and pottery; he has also executed some remarkable designs for medals and coinage and has worked as an illustrator and water color painter. For a number of years he was principal of the National Art Training schools and in 1894 was appointed director of the National gallery. On his election to presidency of the academy he was knighted, and in 1902 a baronetcy was conferred upon him.

Another famous painting will be reproduced next week.



Ann's New Set

by Inez Haynes Gillmore

This is the seventh of a series of stories by Inez Haynes Gillmore, the famous short story writer, dealing with the adventures, trials, and joys of the "Ollivant Orphans," which will appear every Sunday in The Sunday Tribune. Each installment will be complete in itself, although the series of stories as a whole will make a delightful novel. You will find the Ollivant Orphans good company, and the author's facile style and apt character delineation will make you remember the stories as among the best works of fiction you have read.

"YOU don't like Mrs. Peabody, do you, Lainey?" Ann asked, scooping dabs of face cream from the jar and slapping one on each cheek.

"No," Lainey answered decisively, "I don't. At least I shouldn't quite say that. I don't dislike her. She interests me and fascinates me."

The two girls were alone in their big attic room. They were alone in the house, for that matter. Ed was in Panama. Beckie was staying with Aunt Margaret, Matt commuting with Lory Mack.

"I think she's a wonder," Ann disagreed serenely, "and I like her." Perhaps there was a shade too much of emphasis on Ann's "like." She let down her hair. She brushed it with swift, smashing strokes, coiled it.

"But then I like all of those people," she concluded. "What is there about them that you don't like?"

"I don't know," Lainey confessed frankly. "And it isn't that I dislike them exactly. It's more that I disapprove of them, and yet I hate to say 'disapprove' because it sounds priggish. But people always appeal me who work so hard to have a good time."

"Well, you don't think having a good time is easy, do you?" Ann demanded, smearing her cheeks with bandoline. "It certainly takes an awful lot of money."

"That's the only thing it doesn't take, according to my idea," asserted Lainey. "And as for the way they work at it—no, it doesn't seem to me that a good time comes that way."

"I should think," Ann said, "being a socialist and a militant, and all those queer things, that you'd like bohemians."

"I wouldn't call them bohemians exactly," Lainey said, more analytic. "I'd call them bohemiacs. I don't know anything about it, of course, but it has always seemed to me that real bohemians would be simpler."

"Well," said Ann with emphasis, "I like them all. The only way I can judge people is by their clothes; and they all wear perfectly stunning things."

"And, Lainey, I'm tired of knowing shabby people. I've known them all my life. I want to know some smart people for a change—people who do all kinds of things without asking what it costs. And then I do love a spender, and both Commodore Carleton and Mr. Talbot are spenders."

She walked over to the bed and picked up the gown of the blue serge suit which she had made with the assistance of a seamstress. Bending and curving so that the hooks would not catch in her hair, she pulled it on over her head, coaxed it to slim smoothness and trimness.

"Of course we know nice people, but although they've got plenty of class, they certainly are dull. It seems to me the most wonderful thing in the world that Mrs. Peabody has taken a fancy to me. It seems to me that I'm living for the first time in my life."

"Well, you don't think for a moment that I'm not glad for you, Ann," Lainey said. Her tone was full of fervor. But as she watched her sister leave the house and walk briskly up the street the enthusiasm went out of her eyes; they became all doubt.

"First you pull it free from the shell with your fork," said Jimmie Talbot. "Then you salt it. I never add anything but lemon juice, but seeing you're a beginner, I guess we'll do the regular stunts. Now just a drop of tabasco. Now you're off."

"Isn't it delicious!" commented Ann. The mental glow that with her always turned to a physical glow now ran through her entire system. She had just encompassed her first littleneck clam, and she had a conviction that that hazardous and tangling feat had admitted her to the final chamber of young ladyhood.

It was the scene and the atmosphere in which she had in imagination seen herself a hundred times—the dinner hour of Boston's biggest and smartest hotel. The room was crowded; the stadium from which Ann had witnessed her first varsity baseball game had seemed to empty its contents directly into the grill. The big room bulged to bursting with beautiful youth. The Harvard crimson and the Yale blue made a network of color everywhere.

"Can you eat your squab without assistance?" Jimmie Talbot asked presently.

"No," Ann confessed. "I can't, but I will. If they only served manicure scissors I'd know how to go at it. But somehow it seems so wicked. I feel as if I were eating the canary bird."

Their own table, Ann decided privately, was as interesting as any. Indeed, the arrival of their party stirred a long rippling wave of turned heads which began at the door and ended only when they sat down. Apparently the table had been reserved for them; it was set for eight and decorated with crimson.

This in itself would provide substance for a talk until midnight with Lainey, but it was not all.

For instance, a gentleman in evening clothes, who Ann guessed to be the proprietor and who treated Commodore Carleton with an obsequious kindness, had just presented each of the ladies with a souvenir. Ann's gift was a little figurine in cloth of a Harvard player. It would ornament her bureau, Ann vowed, until she died. Also from time to time a concealed orchestra emitted the latest and choicest tango music. Ann had enjoyed this more than anything until Mr. Talbot said: "What rotten music! Why do hotels keep up this farce of having an orchestra?"

"I don't know," Ann said, taking her cue at once. "Isn't it an absurd custom?"

Besides all this, everybody except Ann had drunk cocktails. And now, reposing on the floor between her and Commodore Carleton, sparkled a silver bucket, filled with ice, from which emerged a big bottle with a golden top. Ann had not shared the cocktails; she had not tasted the foamy, sparkly contents of the gold topped bottle. But everybody else had; their glasses had been filled twice. It seemed to Ann that she had never seen people so touchingly happy over a baseball game. Ann was happy, too—happier than any of them—not because of the Harvard victory but because she was where she was.

It was a curious thing about these people—Ann had noticed it many times—they seemed to depend so much on drinks. Always they were just about to have a drink, or always they had just had one. The greatest catastrophe that could happen in their various excursions by sea or land was to strike a dry zone. They were always making detours in their automobile trips to get to places they had not intended to visit, or to avoid spots they had purposed to explore, according as they turned out "wet" or "dry." But they were very attractive about their drinking.

Ann was experiencing a scathing revulsion against the atmosphere of total abstinence in which she had grown up. She discovered that all her life she had been harboring many foolish delusions. She had supposed, for instance, that when people drank they began instantly to stutter and stagger. In point of fact, there was no change whatever so far as Ann could see—except for a more lively turn to the conversation after the second round of cocktails. And Jimmie Talbot was always much nicer then. He became talkative, communicative. Only one thing bothered Commodore Carleton, who seemed ever to have one ear open for their conversation, was constantly interrupting to engage Ann in tête-à-tête. But, although his talk always made Ann laugh, it also made her, as she told Lainey, feel more like 16 than 18.

"You see, Ann," Lainey had remarked at this, with one of her rare touches of humor, "Commodore Carleton doesn't realize yet that there's at least ten years' difference between those ages."

Such an episode had just occurred. Mr. Talbot had become communicative. "You see that table over there, Ann?" he said. "Well, look at the girl with the sitting hen on her hat. I'll tell you a story about her——" when Commodore Carleton burst in.

"This is to Ann," he said. Everybody raised a glass and drank deep.

Ann sparkled and blazed, flushed and smiled. "I don't know what you say when anybody drinks to you," she confided to the table generally, "but it certainly makes you feel important."

"O, Ann," Commodore Carleton sighed, "if I could only have your spirits on plain water."

Commodore Carleton proceeded to engage her in one of his little girl talks. He asked her which she thought the prettiest girl in the room and he agreed with her choice. Ann asked him which he thought the most attractive man, and utterly disagreed with him.

At the same time, Ann secretly longed to resume her tête-à-tête with Jimmie Talbot. There were many definite questions that Ann wanted to ask and many more, as yet vague and unformulated, that would, she knew, hurry in their wake. She was conscious of a great, burning curiosity about these people.

She had met this set all at once. Mrs. Damon, her nearest neighbor in Marlowe place, had let the big old Damon house to Mrs. Peabody. Mrs. Damon asked Lainey and Ann to call on her tenants. Lainey and Ann had called—and all the rest had come naturally enough. Party after party had occurred—mainly on Jimmie Talbot's initiative.

She could not quite make up her mind which she preferred, Commodore Carleton or Jimmie Talbot. If she inclined a little towards the latter, it was only because, so unmistakably, he inclined towards her.

But Ann was certain that she liked Mrs. Peabody best of all. She said this to Lainey with a strenuous emphasis every time the opportunity presented. Ann was certain, too, that Mrs. Peabody liked her, although lately they had had little to say to each other. Ann had a feeling that Mrs. Peabody wanted to say something very much—that it trembled on her lips every time Ann accepted another invitation.

Mrs. Peabody was the most amazing person that Ann had ever seen.

She was one of those women who succeed in being wonderful looking with utterly inadequate materials; a skin naturally pasty, hair characterlessly black and straight, features at odds with all her facial contours. But she had a tall, slim, sharply curved figure. She moved with the swift effortless dart of a sea creature. Her clothes always seemed the emanation of her personality.

Socially she was a strange combination. One-half the time she smothered under a listlessness that was the fellow of Commodore Carleton's; again she exploded with a vivacity that left Jimmie Talbot dry and formal.

Of Mr. Peabody, Ann saw little. He was a tall, thin, bald headed, spectacled gentleman, always in smoking jacket and house slippers. He was writing a book—it was Lainey who discovered this—about the influence of Marco Polo on Christopher Columbus

Mr. Peabody did not do anything in particular beyond spending days at the public library, and he seemed to have no relation to the whirl of his wife's life. Commodore Carleton and Jimmie Talbot had a very definite relation to that whirl; they were the hubs of its wheels.

There were, of course, spokes to those wheels. Three were present: Jock Clarkson, a plump, feathery haired gentleman whose transparent epidermic softness contrasted strangely with his opaque ocular hardness; Miss Bernice Berringer, the first real chorus girl, and Miss Rae Leigh, the first real artist's model that Ann had ever known.

Mr. Peabody sat between the two young women. Ann noted with approval the attention they paid him. First one filled his glass with half the contents of hers; then the other augmented it from the bottle. Mr. Peabody passed rapidly from a stage of extreme volubility about nothing in particular through one of great mirth about even less to a brooding silence.

The two ladies, indulgent of Mr. Peabody's intellectual absorption, devoted themselves thenceforth to the rest of the party. Ann liked to watch them, although she stood a little in awe of them. Miss Leigh had never of her own accord addressed her. And Miss Berringer seemed not to look at Ann when she talked with her. Miss Berringer could sink her gaze deep enough into Jimmie Talbot's eyes, Ann observed.

Miss Berringer was a big woman with eyes babyishly round and blue, and a voice babyishly round and treble. She wore her golden hair carefully tousled; it was all ripply, glinting ends. Her figure seemed to run from the point of her tiny, big buckled shoes wider and wider until her square shoulders effected a truncation.

Miss Leigh, on the contrary, began at the top with a tiny, flat, smooth, russet brown head which Lainey said reminded her of a snake that has just succeeded in coiling. And although architecturally she was as straight and compact as a sheathed umbrella, she ran down by means of her flame colored pagoda dress to a greater and greater amplitude. Miss Leigh was, in some respects, Ann thought, the most wonderful of them all, for she smoked cigarets all the time. Ann decided that she must swallow the smoke; it was such a long time after she drew it into her mouth before it emerged, thinly coiling and fluttering, from the nostrils.

"We're all going to the Pop concert Thursday night, Ann," Jimmie Talbot said presently. "Remember, don't make any engagement for it."

"No, I won't," Ann said obediently. "Who's going?"

"O, all that's here tonight," Talbot answered indifferently, "unless we drop Miss Berringer."

"O," said Ann. And her "O" had a little submerged question in it. She was wild to know why Miss Berringer should be dropped when it so distinctly ruined Miss Berringer's evening if Jimmie Talbot were not present.

"She makes me sick," Talbot went on, as though answering that question. "I hate fat women, anyway. Don't let yourself get fat, Ann, whatever you do."

Ann did not want to get fat. At the same time she thought that Miss Berringer was rather fascinating. She said so.

"And it seems to suit her, being plump—don't you think?" she advanced a little timidly. For the first time in her life, Ann was examining her opinions very carefully before she expressed them.

"Well," Talbot went on, "if she didn't flash that baby blue stare so often. And that baby blue voice gets on my nerves. Bernice is a terrible grafter, too. I get so tired of paying for her diners. Why the other night——"

And then—it was maddening. "This is to Ann," Comodore Carleton interrupted from the other side. Again everybody raised creaming glasses and drank.

"Dear me!" said Ann, glowing and glittering, "you make me feel like a queen or something. My brothers haven't any idea what an important person I am."

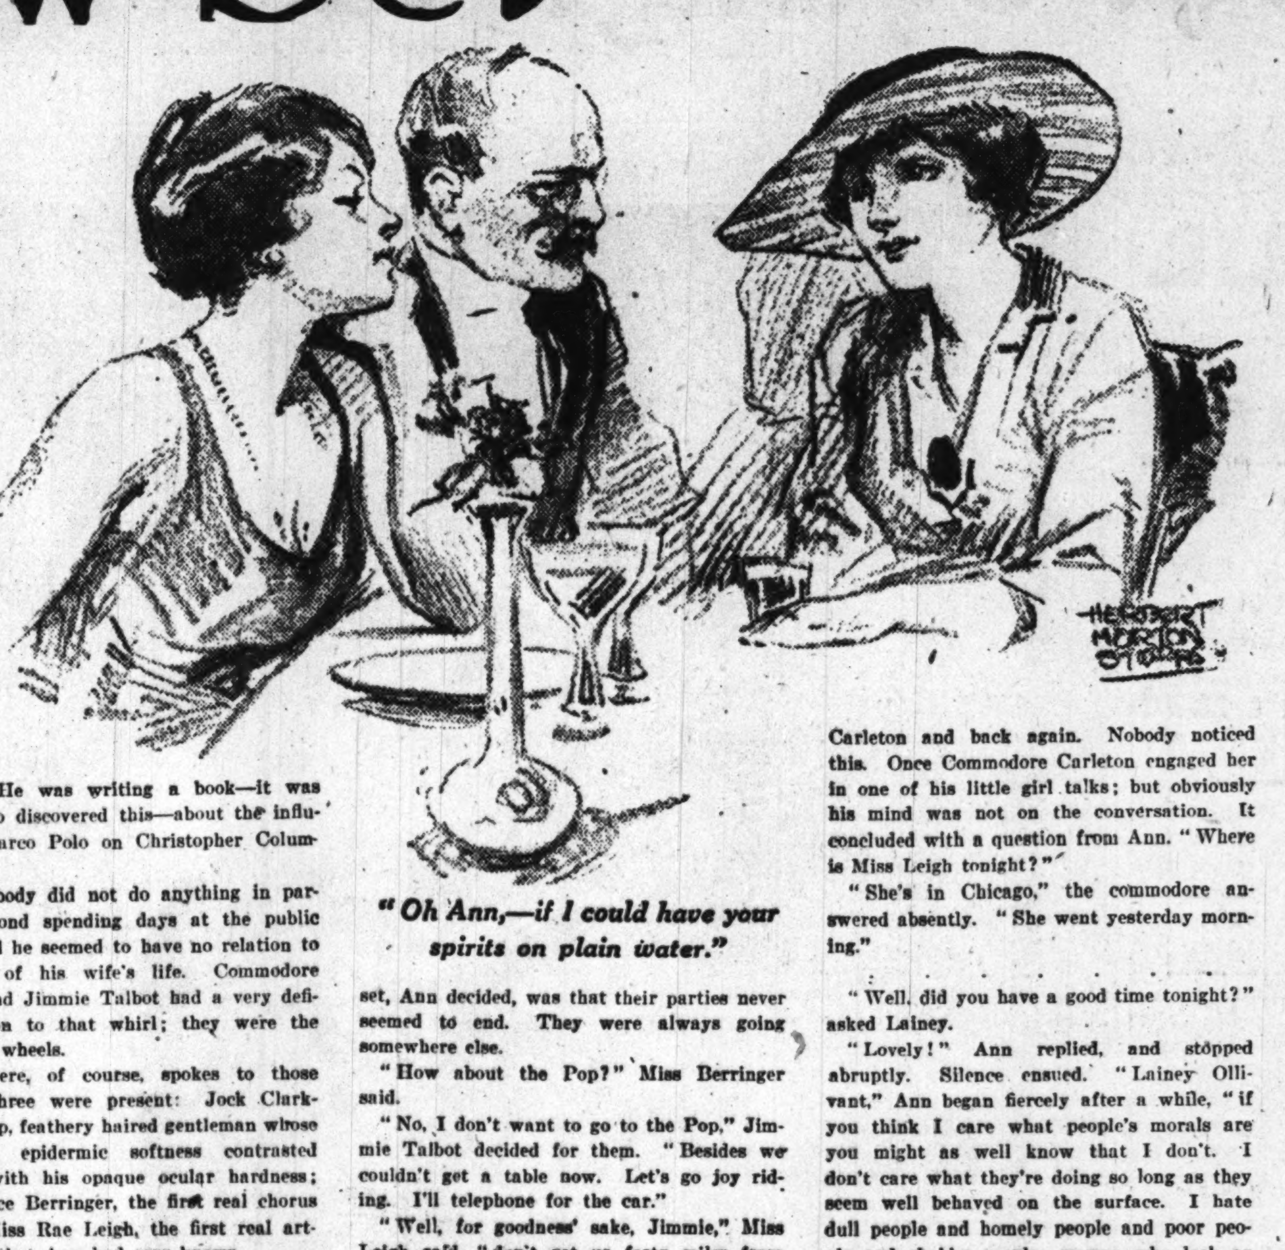
"O, Ann," Commodore Carleton sighed again, "if I only could have your spirits on plain water."

Again he engaged her in a little girl talk.

The dinner progressed. More and more frequently the glasses creamed full and creamed empty. By and by came coffee.

"Now where'll we go?" Mrs. Peabody asked at last, dipping glittering nails into her finger bowl.

What, after all, she loved most about this set, Ann decided, was that their parties never seemed to end. They were always going somewhere else.



"Oh Ann,—if I could have your spirits on plain water."

"How about the Pop?" Miss Berringer said.

"No, I don't want to go to the Pop," Jimmie Talbot decided for them. "Besides we couldn't get a table now. Let's go joy riding. I'll telephone for the car."

"Well, for goodness' sake, Jimmie," Miss Leigh said, "don't get us forty miles from a drink, the way you did the other night."

. . . .

"Well, did you have a good time?" Lainey, popping her little filmy head from the pillow, contemplated her sister, with drooping eyes, sleepy sweet.

"O, lovely!" Ann sighed. Ann's color was as high, her eyes as brilliant, her lips as fresh, as at 6 o'clock. "We had a wonderful dinner and then we drove and drove; O, everybody was so gay. And just think, Lainey, they've asked me to the Pop, Thursday night. I keep thinking they'll get sick of me and drop me. What have I to offer such wonderful people?"

"You've got those eyes to offer them, for one thing," Lainey said, dropping back on the pillow. "They won't get sick of you as long as you keep them in your head."

"Lainey!" Ann said. But, involuntarily, she turned and met with her own wide flaming gaze the deep golden look in the mirror.

Thursday night at the Pop turned out to be another wonderful occasion. Again their table had been engaged in advance. Again it seemed to Ann that a long wave of turned heads cast up a spray of comment as they took their seats. Mrs. Peabody would have excited notice anywhere. She wore black and white; two colors brought together always in sharp contrast and in curious effects of angles and planes. She was unusually apathetic. Perhaps for this reason she drank three absinthe frappés in succession. Commodore Carleton, who, Ann thought, looked worn, devoted himself to her; they talked in low tones. Ann often thought how interesting their conversation must be; Commodore Carleton wouldn't dare to inflict little girl talk on Mrs. Peabody.

After the important matter of the drinks had been attended to, Ann commented regretfully on Mr. Peabody's absence.

"Yes, the old fool," Jimmie Talbot said unexpectedly. "And I'm glad of it. I wish he'd get wise to the fact that nobody wants him, putting the kibosh on perfectly good parties, talking about that prehistoric gink, Polo Marco. I suppose some time he'll finish the rotten thing and then poor Carleton'll have to put up to get it printed."

"But why should Commodore Carleton have to pay for it?" Ann protested. "The Peabodys must have a lot of money. See how they spend it."

"Well—yes—of course—but you see——" Jimmie Talbot seemed to lose all oral connection with his thought. "What I mean is—well, it would be so like the commodore—he's such a philanthropic guy—to get some publishers to pretend to accept the book—so that Peabody would never know what a lemon it was——"

"O, I see," said Ann slowly. And she added blindly, more by way of making conversation than real comment. "Commodore Carleton looks tired tonight."

Jimmie Talbot stopped to finish his high ball. "Yes, I guess he didn't sleep any last night. Mrs. Carleton had one of her attacks."

"Mrs. Carleton!" Ann exclaimed. "Is Commodore Carleton married?"

"Why, yes!" Talbot said this after a slight hesitation. But he went on volubly and smoothly enough. "Didn't you know that?"

Ann had not known it; and for one instant she had a sensation of being cheated. The next moment, however, she realized her ignorance was merely the result of her stupidity.

"Well, everybody else does," Talbot went on briskly. "Mrs. Carleton has been an invalid for years."

"O," Ann said blankly. It was to recover from this that she said, "Where is Mr. Clarkson this evening?"

"In Chicago. His firm wired him to come. He left yesterday morning."

Ann did not digest this. Her eyes had grown perplexed. Indeed, all the evening, they held a little dulling shadow. Her gaze kept going from Mrs. Peabody to Commodore Carleton and back again. Nobody noticed this. Once Commodore Carleton engaged her in one of his little girl talks; but obviously his mind was not on the conversation. It concluded with a question from Ann. "Where is Miss Leigh tonight?"

"She's in Chicago," the commodore answered absently. "She went yesterday morning."

. . . .

"Well, did you have a good time tonight?" asked Lainey.

"Lovely!" Ann replied, and stopped abruptly. Silence ensued. "Lainey Ollivant," Ann began fiercely after a while, "if you think I care what people's morals are you might as well know that I don't. I don't care what they're doing so long as they seem well behaved on the surface. I hate dull people and homely people and poor people and shabby people—women who look as if they did their own work and made their own clothes; and men who are tightwads and high brows. I like spenders better than anybody else."

"All right!" A little coo of mirth pulsed through Lainey's sleepy voice. "Don't mind me. What is your next engagement?"

"We're going to Nantasket on Commodore Carleton's yacht," Ann said with the air of one who unfolds a fairy tale. "We're going to have dinner at a hotel and supper on board the yacht and we're going to sail home by moonlight. It's going to be rather a big party. There will be two automobiles at the wharf to meet us—Commodore Carleton's and Mr. Talbot's, Lainey." Again Ann had the air of challenging her sister, "Commodore Carleton is one of the finest and most delightful men I've ever known."

"And Mrs. Peabody is just as charming as she can be."

The trip to Nantasket was all that Ann expected of it. Only one blot marred the day's joy. And that came immediately after the long gay, sunlit sail down the harbor. They discovered that they were hungry; yet it was too early to dine. Besides, as they had beaten the first of the regular excursion boats, the hotels had not yet thrown off the night's torpor. An occasional small café showed an open door, a sleepy waiter moving within. They stepped into one of these.

It was a small, clean bare room, each table covered with enamel cloth and set with a series of articles in heavy pressed glass, sugar bowl, pitcher, pepper pot, salt shaker, toothpick holder. An old man sat at the desk, painfully adding in longhand a list of special dishes to a pile of printed bills.

Talbot ordered chowder. The old man went to the slide and called the order into the depths. But before bending over he took off his glasses and placed them on the desk. Without them, it was apparent he could see but dimly; he bent and peered and shambled. When the steaming dishes shot up from below, he himself served them, carrying the plates with great caution.

Whenever the old man turned his back, Jimmie Talbot did an imitation of him. The mimicry was perfect, but it made Ann uncomfortable; she was afraid that the victim would turn suddenly and get it. This did not happen, however; Talbot dropped his impersonation with lightning swiftness. At the same time, the incident left an uncomfortable stain in her mind. The morning was half over before she completely forgot it.

But what followed would have wiped out an incident far more unpleasant: a long crisp walk over the sparkling sand, dinner in a faraway hotel, the dining room of which overlooked the sea from a high crag of rock; the invasion later of all the beach attractions. Ann had never seen so much money spent in her life. Last of all came the reembarkation, a supper on the water.

Afterwards, the party divided up into pairs. Talbot took Ann to the bow to watch the dividing waters. They talked for a long time. It grew darker. Stars began to flicker here and there. The moon came up.

"O, I'm tired," Ann said after a long while—and she sat down abruptly.

Every physical element in Ann's appearance contradicted this assertion. The long hot day had accentuated all her colorings. Her cheeks flared; her eyes blazed; her lips seemed to engage her teeth in a dance of rose madder with pearl.

Jimmie Talbot looked at her critically. "You don't look it," he said, "although you've got a license. But I'll fix you up." Suddenly, as by a feat of legerdemain, he pulled a slender green bottle from one pocket, extracted two glasses from the other. The bottle was white labeled, golden headed. The glasses were flare cupped and long stemmed. "Come! Have your first drink of the sparkle stuff with me. It will set you up."

"Yes," said Ann with sudden resolution. "I will. I'd like to know what I'm waiting for, putting off tasting the champagne."

"That's my idea of nothing to put off," said Talbot. "May this be the first of many, Ann." They both drank, Talbot slowly, Ann, in a spirit of amateur bravado, at a single draught. He filled her glass again; she drank that quickly, too.

"Now," she said to herself triumphant but trepid, "if I see double and begin to stutter, I hope I have the sense to keep still about it."

But she did not stutter, for she had no more inclination to talk than at a wonderful drama. And she did not see double; she saw everything with a miraculous clarity as in strange dreams she had experienced. She gazed sometimes at the moon which seemed gradually to come nearer and to swell to a spherical roundness. It inlaid everything with a luminous green enamel. She had a feeling that if she put her hand out, she could touch it. Mr. Talbot did a great deal of feverish ejaculatory talking, Ann a great deal of dreamy moveless listening. Sometimes she lost track of what he was saying. And then sometimes what he said came shouted to her ear.

"——but everybody says she leads him a deuce of a life—I know myself how kind Carleton's been—I've been to their house too many times—he's a wonder—if there ever was a prince of good fellows—so generous—everybody—perfect host—charitable—number of people he carries along—wouldn't believe it—something same situation with my own wife——"

So Mr. Talbot was married. For an instant that seemed hideous. The moon began to flatten and the sea to melt.

"—— never has understood me—not been husband and wife for five years—her way and I go mine—my kind of people and I hate hers—if it wasn't for the children, I'd get out tomorrow."

So Mr. Talbot had children. This fact, hatefuly alien, also suddenly melted into the silver mesh of sea that had caught a bobbing green moon in its web.

And so on and so on. Talbot stirred. "O, I forgot" he said suddenly, and his hand went into an inside pocket. It pulled out a pair of spectacles. "I swiped them when that old geezer wasn't looking," he said proudly.

Ann heard—frozen.

"Give them to me;" she commanded. And Talbot smiling, presented them with a low bow.

Wharves slid into view.

Ed, fresh from his trip, bronzed, clear eyed, was striding up and down the living room. "Why, Lainey," he was saying, "they're the worst crowd Ann could possibly run with. I should think Mrs. Damon was crazy—nobody but a high brow could possibly have—Carleton's a decent enough fellow, but he's been putting up for Mrs. Peabody for years. Jimmie Talbot's a regular rounder. He's pickled all the time. And when he's lit up, he gossips like an old woman. Peabody's a cold blooded old reptile who's not earned his salt for ten years. As for Rae Leigh and Bernice Berringer, the least said about them the better."

Lainey looked interested in these disclosures, but not shocked. "You'd better tell Ann this."

"I'll tell her, all right," Ed said grimly. "Beckie forwarded your letters. Fortunately, I did not get them until I was sailing home. You can fancy what a stew my trip would have been if they'd come before. As it was—what time is it?"

"Twelve," Lainey answered, as Ed scooped out his watch.

"They ought to have been back long before this," Ed said. "And after a day on the water, I should think they'd be too tired to go anywhere else. I can't imagine——"

It was in fact 2 o'clock before Ann arrived.

"You needn't tell me anything, Ed," she said as she kissed her brother. "I've had a long talk with Commodore Carleton and he's done it much more beautifully than you ever could. He's the most wonderful man I—although," she added, as one being honest with herself, "I'd guessed a lot of it. I'm through with those people—but not for the reasons you think. I'm late because—after we'd taken everybody home, I asked Commodore Carleton to drive me back to Nantasket in his machine. There was something I had to do at once, because I could not have closed my eyes until it was done. He understood." She glided smoothly up the stairs.

"Lainey," Ed exclaimed in exasperation, "I don't see how you could have been so blind."

"I wasn't blind, Ed," Lainey answered. "I got it all. Not quite in the detail that you have given it—but as an atmosphere and an influence."

"Then, why in God's name——" Ed began.

"I'll tell you why, Ed," Lainey answered the question that had not been put. "You see things are different nowadays. They don't bring girls up the old way any more—sheltering them from experience and making them incapable of grappling with life when it offers a real problem. Ann is a very pretty girl; she's discontented, audacious, pleasure loving and luxury loving. She's yearned for such experiences as these, and it's her right to have them—in order to find out—I'm glad she's had them."

"O, Lainey," Ed sat down heavily, as though a long tension had snapped, "you don't know what might have happened."

"I know what couldn't happen," Lainey said, "for I know Ann. But whatever occurred, it's Ann's business, not ours."

At the same time, "What changed you, Ann?" Lainey asked the moment she was alone with her sister.

"Well, I'll tell you, Lainey," Ann answered. "I still prefer smart people who know how to do things—and spenders—and I still don't care what their morals are. But I've discovered one thing that I didn't know about myself before—I guess I like them to be kind."

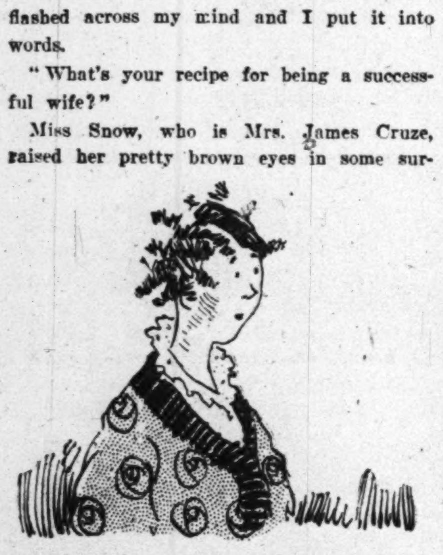
The Frame of Public Favor

A SUCCESSFUL WIFE.

NOT so long ago I sat chatting with Marguerite Snow in the cozy living room of her apartment. Baby Julie played contentedly nearby. A thought flashed across my mind and I put it into words.

"What's your recipe for being a successful wife?"

Miss Snow, who is Mrs. James Cruze, raised her pretty brown eyes in some surprise from the small dress she was embroidering.



"Successful?" she asked. "Why—how do you mean?"

"In these days of divorce, denial of marriage, and subterfuge of all kinds, I want to know how you have managed to be, successfully, two things—a public character and a wife? Now go ahead and tell the lady!"

Mrs. Cruze held up a gold thimbled finger and inspected it thoughtfully.

"Why—by just being sane, I suppose," she said thoughtfully. "It seems to me that that is all anybody needs to do to be successful at anything." There was a moment's silence, then she continued:

"Jimmie and I were both 'legitimate' people when we married, as you will remember. Our courtship was short. When we were married I think we were just about the happiest people on earth." She paused for a moment—"And are yet," she added.

"Along with all my romantic notions, etc.," she went on, "I have a bump of practicability, and I realized that the glamour of honeymoon days would not last forever. So, figuratively speaking, I sat back on my heels and did some hard thinking. I brought to mind the various married women of my acquaintance whose matrimonial ventures had not turned out happily and figured out why."

"And what was the 'why,'"? I inquired.

Said Mrs. Cruze, calmly proceeding with her embroidery: "There were a lot of whys. I knew perfectly well that one woman's husband never went home because his wife nagged. She was a dear, pretty thing—one of those cuddlesome, kissable girls, you know? But she simply couldn't resist the temptation of taking her husband up on everything he said or did. His most trivial and offhand remarks she made him explain until a diagram would have been a Chinese puzzle compared to his explanations. If he was ten minutes late to dinner it was days before he heard the last of it. All this she did in a pretty, pouty, sweet sort of way, but it was maddening just the same, and when I heard that he was becoming more and more of a club man and man about town—I was sorry—but I didn't wonder.

"So—I made up my mind I never would nag.

"Then I recollected the night I spent with another friend. She came into my room for a cozy chat before going to her own—and the spectacle she was, my dear!

"Her hair was all done up in some new fangled sort of curler, and she had been using cold cream—oodles of it. She was just as greasy and shiny as could be. And under her lace peignor—expensive but soiled, she wore a night dress that never in the world cost a dollar when it was new—and it was far from new then."

"'Has John gone away?' I asked—John isn't his name, but I've got to call him something. She looked at me in surprise.

"'Why, no,' she said, 'Why?'

"'Don't tell me,' I said with the privilege of an old friend, 'that you ever let him see you like this.' She grinned at me.

"'My heavens, Peggy,' she said. 'Of course I do. When you've been married as long as I have you'll understand that honeymoon days can't last forever. I've got to take care of my skin and whenever would I cream it if not at night, eh? And if night isn't the best time to put on kid curlers, I don't know. It's dark, isn't it?'

"'Yes,' I said, 'It's dark after the light goes out—and I bet John turns it out in a hurry. But it gets light in the morning. My dear child, you look like sin! For pity's sake—for your husband's sake—for my sake——?'

"But she only laughed. A lot of people wonder how in the world John could ever have deserted his perfectly charming wife. I don't say much—but I think lots!

"So—I made up my mind, no matter whatever happened, my husband should never see me looking like a fright. I'd be pretty for him, even though I might have to give up a few things in the daytime in order that I might cream my face, curl my hair, etc. But when he was home he should always have me at my best.

"Then I resolved that he should never lack for a companion in me. His interests should be my interests. His friends my friends. So many, many unhappy marriages are caused, I think, by husbands and wives allowing their interests to diverge.

"When baby came I had to watch myself, for I think it's the inclination of every young woman to put her child first. Husband, who has been first, being usually a big child himself, gets peeved and runs away from home. Wife doesn't notice his absence at first, but as baby begins to grow and require less attention, she casts about for husband—and lo, he is not there. Sometimes he comes back. Oftener only half of him comes back. The rest of him has been claimed in some other quarter.

"So—I never let being Julie's mother interfere any with my office as wife and companion to Jim.

"And so, I'm happily married. And my happy marriage has to do with my success in work. The two are synonymous, I think, don't you?"

In the case of the lady in question they certainly seem to be!

Rise up, ye wives, and take heed unto yourselves, for many are married but few stay so!

Beverly Bayne

BEVERLY BAYNE of the Metro company, identified for a long time with the Essanay, is one of the prettiest women in moving pictures. Miss Bayne was born in Minneapolis, Minn., on the 22d of November, 1894. She received her education in Minneapolis, Philadelphia, and Chicago. Before entering motion pictures the efforts of Miss Bayne were directed principally toward getting an education. Those who know her say she did vurr, vurr well in that respect. While still a school girl a friend of hers took her to the Essanay company in Chicago. One of the directors attracted by her beauty and intelligence told her, if she would like to, to come out some day and pose for a picture. Did she want to? Girls! Well, anyhow, she went, and was engaged almost immediately, and played the lead in her first picture, "The Loan Shark." Miss Bayne is fond of dancing and outdoor sports of all kinds. She does considerable of her own dress making too, and is altogether a most attractive and charming young woman to meet. No, she is not married. Heaven knows how she has escaped this long.

THE CASE OF PARIS GREEN.

A Nutty Novel.

By Gordon Seagrove.

CHAPTER I.

Paris Green was a plain and simple girl. But she was more simple than plain. She lived in a small town in a western state and her life was one round of gayety. In the morning she rose at 5, milked twenty cows, made breakfast for the horses and cattle, and then the rest of the time she spent in getting meals for her father and eighteen small brothers. Still she was beautiful in her plain way.

One day she was frying lemons in the Green kitchen. As she was about to salt them—her father was passionately fond of salted lemons—a handsome stranger entered. You may think he was a traveling man, but that just shows how far astray you can go. He was a moving picture director.

"Tell me, Paris," he said (he had learned her name from the seed catalogue), "do you always wish to fry lemons?"

At this Paris burst into tears. The stranger was so kind. Finally she looked up. Through her sobs she said:

"No. I wish to play tragedy roles some day, but father wants me to fry lemons."

The moving picture director paused a moment. After that he paused two moments. Then he patted her on the arm.

"You are hired," he exclaimed, suddenly. "Tomorrow you begin in our new six reeler."

Thus did he put Paris Green in the movies.

That night when Paris' father came home he found a lemon on the table.

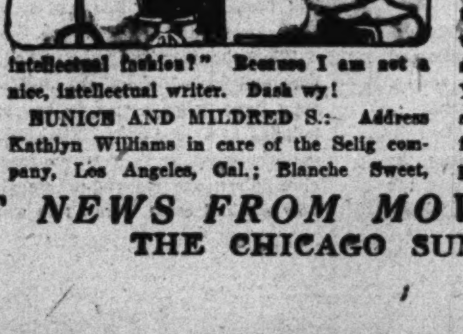
MAE TINEE'S ANSWERS TO MOVIE FANS

"ASK ME! ASK ME!"

VIOLET S.: Address Marguerite Clarke in care of the Famous Players company, Los Angeles, Cal. Glad to please you, my dear.

PEEVER: Why don't I write in "a nice, intellectual fashion?" Because I am not a nice, intellectual writer. Dash wy!



EUNICE AND MILDRED S.: Address Kathlyn Williams in care of the Selig company, Los Angeles, Cal.; Blanche Sweet, Lasky company, Los Angeles; Beverly Bayne, care of the Metro, Los Angeles; Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Ford Sterling, and Owen Moore, in care of the Triangle company, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York; Billie Burke, in care of Kleine, 807 East One Hundred and Seventy-fifth street, New York; Mary Pickford, Famous Players company, New York, and Edna Mayo, Essanay company, 1333 Argyle-st., Chicago.

WYN: I was awfully glad to receive your letter, Wyn. Such a nice, friendly letter it was. I do hope you will write again some time. If you will send me a self-addressed envelope I shall be delighted to write to you personally. Mae Marsh is about 18 years old. Yes, I saw her in "The Birth of a Nation" and thought her wonderful. Can't tell you my favorite actresses. I don't want my hair pulled. Write again some time, child.

A. B. S.: Marshall Neilan and Conway Tearle are with the Famous Players company, Los Angeles, Cal. Wallace Reid is with Lasky, Los Angeles, Cal. Eugene O'Brien took the part of Hugh Terrell in "Poor Little Peppina." Address Blanche Sweet in care of the Lasky company, Los Angeles, Cal.

MRS. E. P.: If your dear little 3 year old is composed at all times I am awfully afraid he can't be quite well. Anyhow, I should not advise you to put him into motion pictures. Let him enjoy a normal babyhood and childhood.

B. K. R.: Charlie Chaplin's mustache is his own. He bought it.

JUST JANE: Being "Just Jane," as you are "Just Jane," seems to me one of the nicest things I've heard of in a month of Sundays. When I think of how happy you make your mother and father by being "Just Jane," staying at home, going to school, and keeping the house gay with "fudge parties," etc., I haven't it in me to encourage your "sneaking ambition" to become a movie actress. Let it sneak in the background for a while, "Just Jane," and go on being the same sweet girl you are.

GLORIA'S ROMANC

Herewith is presented the second installment of the great George Kleine-Tribune photoplay serial, "Gloria's Romance," written by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes as the especial vehicle for America's most charming actress of romance, Miss Billie Burke. For her services as actress in the title role of the serial Miss Burke receives $4,000 a week. "Gloria's Romance" is a photoplay of rare situations and wonderful photography. As a story it has the inimitably brilliant style that characterizes the work of Rupert Hughes. See the pictures at the nearest theater showing them and read the story here. Watch for it every Sunday. The pictures will be shown in the leading theaters. A new episode is released every Monday.

The moon outlined Gloria's beautiful profile

SYNOPSIS.

Sixteen years old, with Royce a young doctor ready to fall in love with her, the gay life of Palm Beach all around her and she forbidden to participate in it by her stern millionaire papa—that's Gloria. She kicks over the traces one night, steals her brother's car to prevent him riding with Lois Freeman, who she thinks is deceiving him, wrecks it, and finds herself lost in the everglades.

(Copyright: 1916: By Adelaide M. Hughes.)

VII.

LITTLE Miss Stafford wandering in a silk dinner frock through the jungle of the Everglades at midnight did not even know that she was lost. The terrors that were in store for her she was not imagining. She was still giggling over her imaginations of the excitement at Palm Beach when her governess discovered that she had run away. Having pinned the gorgon's cloth slippers to the rug, Gloria felt sure that the governess would tumble to the fact as soon as she got up to take a peek at her charge.

There was excitement in plenty at Palm Beach, even more than Gloria dreamed, for the grownups knew what Gloria did not know, how dangerous the path of life is for a young girl alone. All the world is treacherous everglades to her.

Miss Sidney woke as Gloria expected, sprawled as well as Gloria hoped, her feet on high and the rug waving in air. She knew who played the trick and ran into Gloria's room. She saw that the bed was empty, the sleeping suit tossed aside, the dinner gown gone. She flung into her bathrobe and ran to give the alarm to Gloria's father. Her costume made a sensation even among the sensational costumes of Palm Beach. She found Pierpont playing cards with young Dr. Royce.

What she told them sent them running in opposite directions, frightening the dancers and the loiterers about the tables in the gardens and various couples surprised in loving embrace among the inviting nooks.

On the lawn the two men came together again and shook their heads in signal of failure. They saw David and Lois. David mentioned the loss of his automobile. Neither he nor Pierpont thought of Gloria as the thief. They continued the search among the crannies of the enormous hotel and among the cottages of their friends.

But Dr. Royce had been speaking of Gloria's rebellious heart only that afternoon. He ran at once to a parking space where automobiles were kept. The chauffeurs were not about and he did not pause to haggle. He threw away a "For Hire" card and, leaping into the saddle, so to speak, of a six cylinder thoroughbred, dug his spurs into its side and plied the lash.

The car broke into such a run that its own chauffeur did not recognize it as it shot into the highway. Royce checked his speed only when he met occasional saunterers along the roads. From most of these he got no information. From one Negro on a bicycle chair he had the comforting answer:

"Yassa, I done seen a bar'haided young missy in a autebile going licketty split—yassa. She turned sothe at the next cornder. If I hadn't a throwed this year wheel over mighty peart I'd a——"

Royce was not interested in the Negro's might have beens. He was already at the next corner, and he turned south, too. He had no interest in the beauty of the foliage, in the moonlit sky, or in the quiet sea alongside. His eyes were probing the distance ahead. He spoke to the car as if it were a horse, and perhaps he swore at it. At any rate, a few people crossing the road later sniffed a curious mixture of gasoline and brimstone.

Now and then a red light ahead cheered Royce on, but when he overtook it it was never on the car that carried Gloria. He overtook and passed everything. There was not much to overtake in that lone road at that hour.

In one or two of the villages he found some one awake who had seen a young girl or a comet shoot through. He pushed on and on, driving as fast as possible and trying to drive a little faster.

After miles on miles of exceeding every speed limit except that of his engine he began to fear that he had come on a wild goose chase—where the wild goose had not flown. He knew that people are usually ready to tell a roadside lie and say that they have seen anything that any wayfarer asks if they have seen. Probably Gloria had not come this way at all.

He had about decided to turn back and endure the laughter that would greet him. Long ago, no doubt, Gloria had reappeared and been resentenced to bed.

But even as he slowed up for the turn he caught sight of tire tracks swerving wildly and turning off into the sand between two dunes. He shut off his power and set his brakes, drew into the side of the road, and jumped out.

He passed the barrier of the dunes and caught sight of David's racing car in the waves. The billows flaming with moonlight were sweeping over the little machine in terrifying ruthlessness, now tossing up spray which the moon turned to jewelry, now smothering it all from view.

Royce gazed aghast. He tore his hair at the vision. He could almost see Gloria caught in the wheel and held fast while she drowned slowly, chokingly.

He was about to dash into the sea and fight it for the body of the little runaway when he saw footprints in the wet sand. Robinson Crusoe could not have felt so wild a thrill of joy. Dr. Royce did not see the marks of a black man's sole; he saw the impress of tiny slippers. They were like exclamation marks and the toes were pointing away from the water!

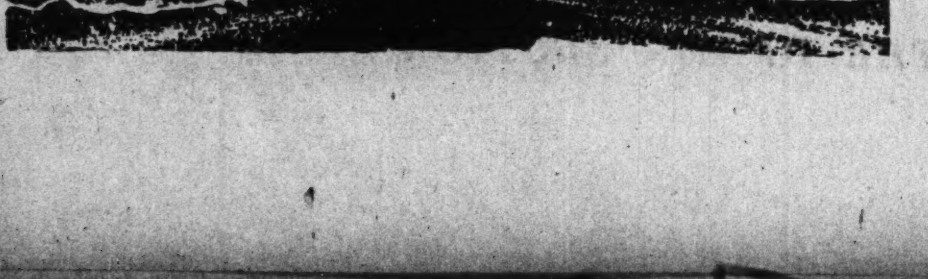
With a cry of relief Dr. Royce followed them across the sand to the highway. But Gloria had not turned north in the road. She had been wooed into the dense, lush foliage.

The doctor regarded it with dread. He could not imagine how tempting it had been to Gloria's truant heart. He was afraid that she might have lost her mind with fear.

He had hardly plunged into the thicket when he lost trace of her. Dense shadows alternated with patches of almost noontime light. He found a clew again, lost it again. He sprang aside from a dry, whirring coil that was a rattlesnake. He tripped on a snakelike vine and dived through bushes. He feared at any moment that he might come across Gloria dead or dying. He called and called, then paused to listen. He had no answer. At last, however, he heard a faint cloppety-clop of hoofs on the road.

He ran back, hoping that he might find some courier with news. Instead he met a boy from a pineapple plantation. Royce hailed him and learned that he was going for a doctor. He had heard and seen exactly nothing of Gloria. He stared at Royce with uneasiness. The doctor was indeed a suspicious looking object. His evening dress had recorded every sprawl in the sand and mud and most of the brambles that he had passed. But he was not crazy, though he looked it. He was not crazy enough to think that he could find Gloria in the Everglades without help.

He knew the history of that vast maze, so inhospitable to all save the Indians that only two or three white men have ever crossed its 8,000 square smiles of pathless waste. Those who have gone in to search for others have usually had to be searched for themselves.



If Royce had not known this the boy would have told him, for when Royce asked him to get down and help in the search for Gloria the boy shook his head with emphasis:

"Ump-umm, mister! Not me! Folks that gits lost back in yonder stays lost for keeps."

This did not for a moment tempt Royce to give up. He was about to let the boy go when it occurred to him that Gloria's father would be frantic for some word of her whereabouts. He found a prescription pad in his pocket and a bit of pencil and he wrote a note.

> Pierpont Stafford, Royal Poinciana: I found Gloria's car in the surf and her footprints leading into the Everglades. I am following them, but think you had better organize searching parties to beat the whole district. STEPHEN ROYCE.

He gave this to the boy and a bill from the small roll he found in his pockets. He made the boy promise to go to the nearest telephone and transmit the message to the hotel. He also asked the boy to explain to Mr. Stafford where "her" was. Royce had no idea himself. The boy told him: "We-all are abote half ways between Pompano and Colohatchee."

Royce's face did not brighten at this and the boy with contempt for such ignorance explained that it was "goin' on forty mile sothe of Palm Beach."

He promised to deliver Royce's message and also to give the alarm among the nearest villages. Then he rode away and Royce returned again to the chase, increasingly appalled at the thought of Gloria alone there.

Now and then he found some hint of her, a shred of silk from her Paris frock torn away by a clutching thorn. He found even a loop of vine where she had loitered. He was puzzled by the curious sequence of her slipper marks till he realized that she must have paused to swing like a carefree child. This gave him a little comfort. At least she was not afraid. He understood the very whim of hers that made a holiday of the flight.

Thus far he had followed her through the illumination of the moon and the glowing dawn. But the broad daylight did not bring him the help he counted on. It merely emphasized the confusion of the labyrinth.

VIII.

Gloria had not been long in finding out that there can be too much liberty as well as too little. No child wandering in a dream through nightmareland could have seen a more fantastic world than that Florida entanglement. She was entranced at first, but at length she had had enough. She was done with fairy stories. The dense foliage became a tiresome reality. She learned from the experience of torn flesh what "saw grass" or "sword grass" or "knife grass" meant, and she nearly learned what poison the "cotton mouthed moccasin" carries in its lethal fangs She nearly stepped on an alligator. Both fled.

The zest of the adventure was soon gone; the effect of fatigue grew upon her. She would have been more scared if she had not grown so sleepy. She would have been more sleepy if she had not been so hungry. She found a cocoanut, but could not break it. She grew angry and bit at it in vain. She cast it aside and found bananas growing in a huge bundle. She stayed her famine with these.

She kept trying to find a pathway out. At length she came across footprints and rejoiced to find at last a sense of human companionship. She would follow the tracks till they led her to somebody's home. The very word brought tears to her eyes. Then she recognized that the footprints had been made by her own satin slippers now hopelessly bemired and torn.

She had read of lost people who walked in circles till they died of exhaustion. She felt ready to die so already. But mainly she was yawning her pretty head off. She beat about the bush and said "Shoo!" to any crocodiles or boa constrictors that might be in hiding. Then she stretched herself out and began a little prayer. She could not keep awake to finish it. In her sleep she dreamed herself back in the beautiful bed she had foolishly left. She dreamed that she was asleep in her own room.

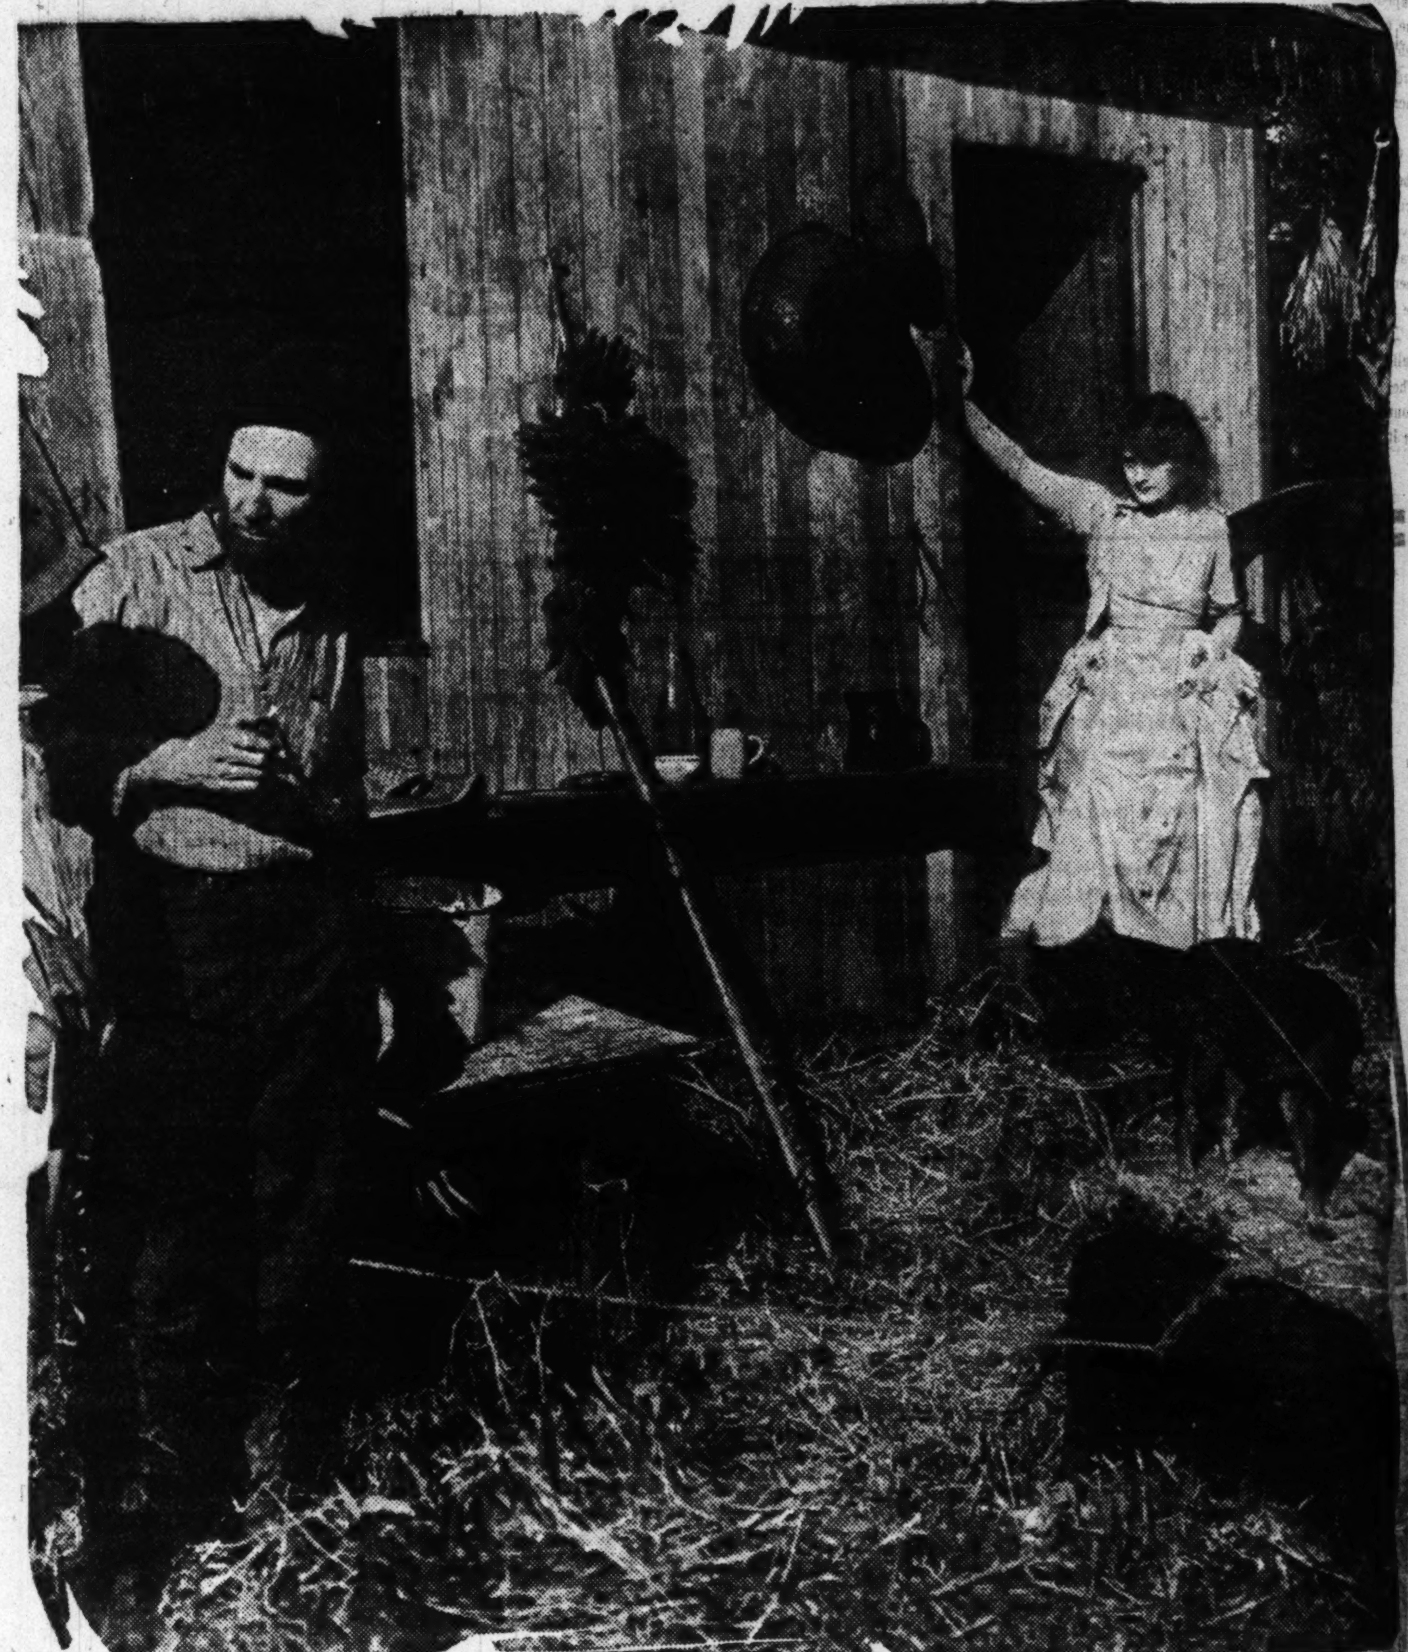
Meanwhile Dr. Royce stumbled and groped through the jungle in search of her, and her father and brother were in conference with the Palm Beach police.

The message that Royce gave to the boy from Colohatchee reached them a little before dawn. It only increased their alarm, but it gave them something definite to do. They made no further secret of Gloria's disappearance. They called on everybody for help.

The latest scandal in divorces, the most startling bathing suit at yesterday's sand parade, were forgotten that day. The only theme of talk was the fact that Pierpont Stafford's daughter was lost in the Everglades and that a big reward was offered for her rescue. Parties of all sorts attacked the problem.

Cars went scuttering along the little railroad that pushes a short distance into the glades; boats of every sort glided along the drainage canal; motor boats, canoes, skiffs, dugouts were spinning hither and yon among the thousands of waterways.

David forgot Lois Freeman and the engagement he had to play golf with her that morning. He and his father had anticipated the dawn in the bayous.



Gloria is the unwelcome guest of the Sipe family

Freneau, strolling across the lawn to open the office of the New York brokers he represented, found Lois Freeman and her father reading the morning papers. They spoke of the loss of Gloria and the $5,000 offer for her restoration to her father. Freneau meditated. He could use $5,000 or less to great advantage.

When Lois invited him to play golf he said that he had another engagement. Whatever motive it was that moved Freneau, he resolved to forego his opportunity to court Lois without the disturbing presence of his wealthy rival. He bade her good-by, but he did not go to his office. He sauntered to the water's edge and chartered a motor boat. He dropped into it and turned the engine over. The water began to churn and the boat to skim the flashing waters of Lake Worth. He was so eager that he stood up with the tiller ropes in his hand and stared ahead as if already trying to pierce the veil.

Almost everybody in Florida must have been aware of Gloria's disappearance except the family of shiftless paupers named Sipe. They had come south some years before and put their savings in an orange grove. A vicious winter frost had ruined them in a night. They had neither the spirit to go north nor to conquer the south. They sank into a kind of sluggard lethargy, hating the world and all the lucky ones. The tropical fertility of the soil barely kept them from starvation, and they loafed through life in slovenly dejection.

Gloria had lain down to sleep just about where the Sipe fence would have been if there had been a fence. She had not seen their shack beyond the heavy growth.

When she woke and yawned and rubbed her eyes and looked about she decided that she must have fallen asleep in the horticultural building at Bronx park. She could not imagine such giant, such grotesque trees anywhere else. Then she realized where she was and how she had come there. She wondered how she should get out of there. She wanted very much to have her governess scold her for oversleeping and her maid to fill the tub with water that was too hot as usual.

She did not like to be out in the broad daylight in an evening gown, especially not in a gown so torn that the broad daylight shone through it in places. She rose to her feet and limped aimlessly. She caught sight of the Sipe hovel. It was a tumbledown hut, but it looked like the Royal Poinciana to her. The pigs and the mangy dogs might have been gazelles in a park and the ragged man and woman and boy might have been a group of royal blood.

She ran toward them for shelter. They received her with stupid wonder and with no hospitality. When she told who she was the name of Stafford meant nothing to them. When she told how she came there they did not believe her. They stared at the little diamond ring on her finger and the gold bracelet at her wrist. These meant something to them.

The woman upbraided Gloria for being out in such rags and Gloria offered to buy anything she had. Mrs. Sipe refused to sell what she had on, which was all she had. The only extra covering was a new suit she was making for the boy out of some hemp sacking. Gloria did not want a boy's clothes, but Mrs. Sipe sneered that they were more decent than what she had on. Also that she might pass some rough characters or even some Seminole Indians on her way back and that she would be safer as a boy than as a girl.

This convinced Gloria. She paid for the clothes with the ring and went into the shack to change. The old woman snatched the gold bracelet from her arm. She took it as payment for a cup of weak but bitter coffee that Gloria gulped down.

When Gloria was dressed the Sipe boy was ordered to take her to a path which would eventually lead her to the main road.

It was easier walking in breeches than in the skirts she had worn. But she did not like the manner of the boy. He began to pay her crude compliments and finally grew so impudent that she boxed his ears. He took his revenge by pointing her in the wrong direction. He turned back and laughed. He had an ill nourished sense of humor.

Gloria pushed on and on, growing more and more doubtful of the way and dismally footsore. She longed for the little racing car that she had left in the waves, or even for a pony or a mule. She prayed for anything to ride.

Suddenly a turn in the path revealed what she took to be an answer to her prayer—a horse! It was a doleful looking animal, yet it was a horse. She ran forward and spoke to it soothingly. But it backed and reared. It was not a white man's horse and it hated the whites even as its red master had hated them. Thereby hung a tale.

IX.

The family known as the "Cypress Wolves" was the sole remnant of one of the fiercest tribes the palefaces had met in the Seminole wars.

Many of the tribe had been captured by unpardonable treachery. The soldiers of that day, unable to follow the Indians to their haunts, used false promises to lure them out. Our dealings with the Seminoles are among the worst blotches on American history. They earned for us the undying distrust of such Indians as still remain in the Everglades. To them the words "white man" and "liar" are synonymous.

They guard the secret paths of the maze with religious devotion and they have refused all bribes to disclose them. The Indians nowadays are often kindly to such lost explorers as fall among them. They will guide the wanderers out, but they will not guide them in.

If Gloria Stafford, who was strolling slowly into the very heart of the Cypress Wolf region had come among them as a young girl in distress they would have treated her with chivalry. But her first action outraged their most sacred beliefs.

The old chief Hitakee of the Cypress Wolf tribe had more dignity than wealth. But he owned a horse. It was an ancient mustang and its manners were bad; but it was almost the only horse owned by an Everglade Indian.

At the very time that Gloria had been helped to solve her algebra problems by Dr. Royce old Hitakee was solving all his problems with the aid of the medicine man of his tribe. He died with great dignity.

The young brave Katcalani was the logical successor to the chiefship. He had his eye on that horse and dreamed of himself astride it. The widow of Hitakee had another idea. Shonolakee was her name. She did not intend that her dead husband should walk all the way to the happy hunting grounds. In her youth when the chiefs had horses and rode them they rode also to the far off paradise. Each chief's squaw saw to that, for she cut the throat of his horse and sent its ghost after its master's spirit.

Katcalani tried to save Hitakee's horse from sacrifice, but Shonolakee grew so fierce and the other squaws so fierce that he felt his election in danger. Among the Seminoles the women have long had equality and suffrage. They even have the men working for them.

Just about the time that Gloria Stafford was feeling her way through the thickets about the Cypress Wolf village Shonolakee led the old horse out to slaughter. She was weeping so bitterly that she did not heed when the sacrificial knife fell from her belt. She tied the horse, said her prayer, and reached for the blade. It was gone. She turned back to look for it.

She had not gone far when Gloria Stafford parted the palmetto leaves and saw before her the steed she had prayed for. It evidently had an owner, for it was tied. But Gloria was accustomed to taking what she wanted. Her father could always pay for it. He would pay well for this darling old nag if it carried her home.

She approached it with coaxing words and untied the halter. The pony shied and tried to caress her with its heels. Gloria had been well schooled in horsemanship from childhood, and she soon had her hands in the mane of the unwilling mustang and vaulted to its back.

She had no sooner set her heels into its ribs than the old squaw returned with the recovered knife. She saw the sanctified charger being carried off—and by a ragamuffin evidently from one of the white trash families that even the Seminoles despised.

She gave a wild cry of alarm, the fierce "Yo-ho-ee-hee!" that had once made the Indian hunters' blood run cold. The tribe answered in wondering haste. She pointed to Gloria and the vanishing horse. It was not vanishing very fast, for the wilderness was thick and Gloria did not know the way. The Seminoles divided and ran in various directions to head her off.

In a few moments the young chief himself leaped from ambush, and caught the horse by the nose and ear. The old squaw was not far behind and Gloria was dragged to the ground and threatened with the death of a thief—a sacrilegious thief.

X.

Old Shonolakee raised her knife and was about to plunge it into the heart of the shivering captive when something about the captive made her pause. She saw that the lad was a lass. Her rage was forgotten in amazement for a moment. She grunted: "The boy he is one squaw."

The other Indians stared at Gloria and the pallor of her terror was reddened with shame. The blush was very becoming to her. The young chief stepped forward for a closer look at it.

Gloria, a pitiful little thing in her Indian rags, was set to work.

Thinking him a possible rescuer Gloria turned on him one of her ninety candlepower smiles. The effect was greater than she had expected. Ketcalani was dazzled. He blinked, then turned his eyes at the smoky Indian maidens clustered about. Each of them had ambitious dreams of being his wife. But shabbily as Gloria was dressed she was a tearing beauty in any company. Compared to the unkempt daughters of the Everglades she was a goddess.

Katcalani's heart beat with an unknown excitement. He resolved to begin his new chieftainship with an act of courage. He would defy not only the men, but even the women! He seized Gloria's hand and shouted: "If boy is squaw he is my squaw."

Gloria did not understand the meaning of this. But she saw that it had not endeared her to the Indian women. They murmured their wrath and would have struck her down if Katcalani had not protected her. She drew closer to him and he took that for consent.

Gloria tried to explain who she was, but the fame of her father's wealth had not penetrated to these depths. If they understood her frantic cry that she was rich, they mumbled: "All white folks liars all the time."

They led her into the village, a huddled group of palmetto shacks, mainly open sheds with a roof thatch of palmetto leaves. The place was not attractive to any of the senses. The Seminoles are not neat. Dead fish lying about the ground and old terrapin shells pleased neither the eye nor the nose.

Shonolakee first went aside and sent the dead chief's horse on the long road to the happy pastures. Then she returned to prepare Gloria for the honor of becoming the wife of the chief. She led her into her own hut and gave her the habiliments of an honest squaw in place of the boy's disgraceful togs. Seminole ladies are modest. Then she showed Gloria a little sewing machine. She had bought it with the proceeds of rattlesnake skins she had sold to tourists in the villages along the railroad. She promised Gloria that some day if she were good she might be allowed to play on the machine. The squaw's idea of being good consisted largely of doing heavy labor. The first duty of a wife was to gather wood for the fire. She set Gloria to work.

Seeing the pitiful little thing in her Indian rags, bending down to pick up sticks, Royce himself might have passed her without a second look.

Royce was not the only one in the Everglades hunting the estray. Freneau had gone as far as his motor boat would carry him. Then he had found a native Indian with a dug-out, a cypress log hollowed. The Indian drove it with a pole. He had heard nothing of Gloria's presence in the thicket, but he promised to guide Freneau to some of the scattered villages.

Meanwhile Dr. Royce, hunting in every direction, had happened upon the home of the Sipes, and had asked about Gloria. Fearing that he had come to demand the return of Gloria's jewels they pretended not to have seen her. But Royce caught a glimpse of Gloria's evening dress, which Mrs. Sipe was trying to hide. He charged the Sipes with deception, probably with murder.

They hastened to confess that they had seen her and helped her on her way in the clothes of a boy. They sent young Sipe to show Royce which way Gloria had gone. Young Sipe, still angry at Gloria and his parents, sent Royce in a false direction, too. He laughed as he saw the crazy stranger in the tattered evening dress, stagger away in his blind man's buff, not knowing that rivals were searching the wilderness, not knowing that Gloria was now in Indian servitude.

She approached the pony with coaxing words

The young chief, Katcalani, kept watching Gloria. Her whiteness, her delicacy, the unconscious daintiness with which she lifted a crooked faggot from the brushwood, and the luxurious aureole of her hair in the Florida sun, made him frantic to call her his own. He beckoned her to follow him and led her to a distance where the shambling, dusky women of his tribe could not see him bow his turbaned head to the chalk faced squaw.

Gloria hoped that the peculiar person was going to help her to escape, and she followed him with only a little fear. But he paused and began to declare his passion with all an Indian's eloquence.

His dialect was crude, but his emotion was fierce. He compared her with the most graceful palm, with the rarest orchids. He said that the sunrise was in her hair and the stars in her eyes. He compared himself with the great warrior Osceola, who had slain so many whites. He offered to kill all the white men in Florida to please her. He spoke of his wealth. His turban had a silver band made out of four silver dollars. He had a gold watch, sixteen handkerchiefs, and eighteen shirts. He had six of them on. Gloria should have his grandmother's forty pounds of beads to wear—she should be a queen and she would not have to plow.

Gloria had often dreamed of her first proposal of marriage. This was it. It did not accord with her dreams. She was disgusted, aghast, afraid. She could think of nothing to do.

She caught sight of the dagger that Katcalani wore in his belt. In a sick horror of her fate she snatched it from him. She had not the courage to kill herself, or him, but she gave him the knife and begged him to plunge it into her heart. Katcalani glared at her in a frenzy of humiliation and wrath. Then the child-woman wavered on her tired feet and suddenly dropped to the ground in a dead faint.

Katcalani's rolling eyes made out a startling vision. Dick Freneau was standing before him. The Indian guide had put him ashore near the village and was waiting for him to make inquiries. Freneau had pushed through the palmettoes just in time to see Gloria swoon. He recognized her by her fair skin and her bright hair. He approached Katcalani to claim her and the reward.

But the young chief was in no mood for a parley. He gnashed his teeth and threatened Freneau with such bloodthirsty fury, that Freneau fell back. He felt his hair rise and his scalp already going. He retreated in such haste that Katcalani did not pursue him far. He stood watching for him to reappear.

Meanwhile, by another roundabout land path, Dr. Royce had found the Seminole village. He saw Gloria where she lay on the ground. He thought her some young Indian maiden asleep. He paused to waken her and ask if she had seen Gloria. He saw that she was Gloria.

Before he could stoop to lift her he saw Katcalani turn and stare. The Indian had a knife in his hand. He had put one white man to flight: he charged on this other. But Royce did not fall back. He advanced. He was half mad with his night's wandering and he was afraid of nothing. With his bare hands he went straight into the fight.

He dodged the blade, clutched the chief's wrist, and closed. He whipped his heel round Katcalani's knee and tripped him, fell on top of him. But the Indian was agile as a panther, and he rolled over. Then Royce was on top, then the Indian broke free. Then the men circled and feinted and finally clenched again, went to earth again, rolled, broke, rose, clenched, cursing and grunting in mortal hatred.

Freneau from the thicket where he hid witnessed the fight, watched it in fascination a moment. At length, seeing that the battle had carried the two warriors away from Gloria's vicinity, he made so bold as to run to where she lay, and pick her up.

Her eyes opened. She found herself in his arms. She stared, then recognized him. He was like a rescuing angel. She embraced him with a little wail of gratitude and adoration. She had not seen Royce at all. Freneau led her away from the struggle down a twisting path to the landing place, where the Seminole guide waited for him.

He helped Gloria into the canoe and ordered the guide to push out into the bayou. If he felt any impulse to go back to the aid of Royce, he suppressed it, for Gloria's sake. He neglected even to mention that Royce was even then at death grapple with Katcalani. It would only have excited the trembling child still further. Indeed, when Gloria poured forth her gratitude to Freneau for his fearlessness in her behalf, he shrugged his shoulders and smiled. He was too much the gentleman to contradict a lady.

The Indian poled his dugout along the tortuous channels, until finally it was hailed from the shore. Gloria's father and brother had caught sight of them.

When Gloria was landed and in her father's arms, she told what hideous danger Mr. Freneau had saved her from. Then Pierpont embraced the young man, and David wrung his hands, forgetting that they had lately been jealous rivals for Lois Freeman's smiles.

XI.

Royce and Katcalani fought on without thought of truce. Katcalani could have brought help by crying out, but he had the knife and he would not bring his people to see him worsted by an empty handed white man. Royce had the skill of a college wrestler, the coolness of a surgeon, and the determination of a lover. But he was dulled with fatigue and wearing down rapidly. At last, however, he broke free and stood off for a moment's breath. Katcalani, dripping with sweat, and a little dizzy with the struggle, went at him to finish him.

He ran like a wolf and leapt like a wolf. But he ran straight into a most beautiful uppercut. Before the point of his knife could reach Dr. Royce, the point of his jaw met Royce's fist. The world went to pieces in an earthquake, and it was some minutes before Katcalani found himself lying flat on his back with no enemy in sight.

Royce had picked up the knife and turned to Gloria. She was not there. He nearly fell down with amazement. Then he caught sight of something moving near the water's edge. He staggered as fast as he could through the underbrush. He reached the shore in time to see Gloria and Freneau in the dugout just rounding a barrier of saw grass. He ran along the shore, trying to get near. He was glad that she was safe, and it cheered him no little to feel that he had been able to do something to earn a place in her heart.

He hurried on and on. At last he came to a clearing and found the Staffords holding a family reunion. Pierpont had his arm about Freneau. Gloria was clinging to Freneau's hand. She told Dr. Royce that Freneau had saved her from worse than death. Royce looked at Freneau to hear him tell the truth.

Freneau did not speak. Royce could not. He was too fagged in muscle and soul. And it was not his custom to boast of his prowess. He simply could not lay claim to their gratitude. After all Freneau had restored Gloria to their arms. He turned away with a wry smile. The Staffords were sorry that he should permit jealousy of Freneau to embitter him. It hurt Gloria especially. She had liked Dr. Royce so well.

But he loved her.

"HEY! WHERE'S TH' FIRE?"

Called Out Motorcycle Cop

Oney Fred Sweet

IF ever I had owned an automobile, if ever I had driven one of them, if ever I had been accustomed to gliding along in a stream of cars with one eye on the steering wheel and the other on the lookout for a motorcycle cop, then motorcycle cops would probably appear to me in an altogether different light. As it was, I got into the chugging stream the other day perched on a seat just behind an officer of the law, who was "putt, putt, putting" around for traffic violators, and in consequence I soon came to look upon all auto drivers with suspicion.

I don't know how it feels to "look out" on a motorcycle cop, turn white, and start to frame excuses, but I do know the sensation of "looking in" on a driver with a stern expression that hints of "Good morning, judge."

It's a lot more comfortable zipping along on the extra seat of a motorcycle than it appears to be from a distance. It was a little jiggly when we crossed street car tracks and bumps, the shrillness and suddenness of our whistle almost caused me to lose my balance once or twice, and every time we turned a corner I thought that we were going to swerve completely over on our side; but riding a bucking broncho out west in the old days, tin starred with authority to round up cattle rustlers, must have been tame sport in comparison.

"How did you ever get the idea you wanted to be a motorcycle cop?" called back Jack Wilcox above the "putt, putts."

"How could you get the idea I wouldn't want to be one?" I yelled back. "Everybody in the cars smiles so nice to you."

"Yes, but you can't hear what they say about me when I've got on my—stick tight now; I'm going to make a sudden turn here, and we'll plant ourselves in one of my 'holes,'" hollered Jack.

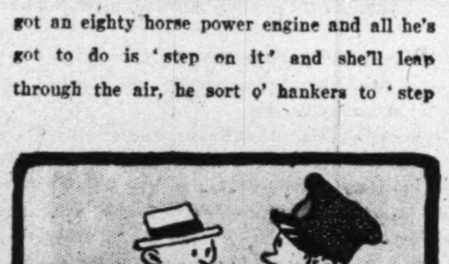
Planted for a Surprise.

The "hole" was somewhere out along Cottage Grove avenue. It was really just an alley that afforded a dandy place to hide.

"They're pretty wise—these fellows who like to speed," explained Jack as we alighted from the steel steed. "A lot of them can spot a motorcycle copper, uniform or no uniform, as far as they see him. They'll be coming along a nice stretch of asphalt like this and with the coast looking clear the temptation gets too much for 'em. When a fellow's got an eighty horse power engine and all he's got to do is 'step on it' and she'll leap through the air, he sort o' hankers to 'step on it.' It's there and he wants to use it. Planted this way, we can see 'em craning their necks around to see if everything's all right, and then they start to 'hit the ball.' Do they get away? They do not. We swing out after them and the first thing they know they're pinched. They figure we must have dropped down out of the clouds. There was only one that ever got away from me. I was planted this way once out in Austin and a car went by so fast I couldn't see which way it was going."



"I got into the chugging stream the other day."

"What do they say when you take 'em by surprise? Don't they ever get sassy on the way to the station?"

"They don't say much, because we can be as mean as they can. If they make trouble, you know, we can 'book 'em' for disorderly conduct. One fine is about all most folks care to have to pay."

"But if they try to get away?"

Mr. Wilcox patted his hip pocket, and I saw the outline of a cannon. "But I seldom have to flash it," he added, "unless I happen to have nabbed a stolen car. It's a funny thing, but ninety times out of a hundred we fellows can tell a stolen car; there's something about the machine or the driver that you sense the minute you have 'em turn up to the curb."

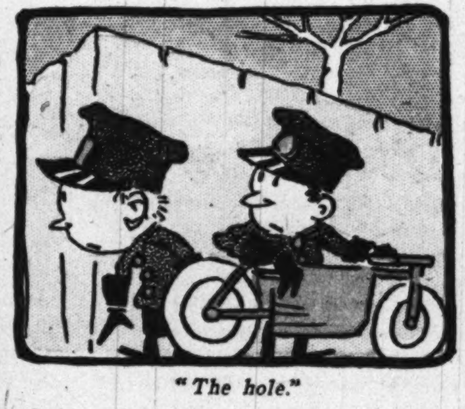
An Officer Just for a Pinch.

All kinds of cars were gliding past out there in Cottage Grove avenue—low cars with long noses, short cars in which the occupants sat very straight and proud; red cars, yellow cars, cars on which the color had begun to wear away. Jack Wilcox could tell well enough that I had something on my mind.

"It's been fine to ride behind you," I said finally. "I don't want you to think I haven't been appreciative, but if it ain't asking too much I would like to borrow your outfit for a minute—just one little teenie weenie 'pinch' is all I care to make."

"I'm afraid you ain't well enough informed on the traffic laws, never having owned or driven a car yourself," the cop answered skeptically.

"They ain't supposed to go faster than ten miles an hour in the business district, not faster than fifteen miles an hour in the residence section, and no faster than twenty-five miles an hour in the outlying parts," I monotoned. "When I run on to a car going faster than that I simply catch up with it, put up my gloved hand, blow my whistle, and motion the driver to pull over to the curb. Those who are residents of the city can sign their own bonds; nonresidents, cash bond of $50."



"The hole."

"O, there's a whole lot more than speeding you've got to be on the lookout for," poohed Mr. Wilcox. "You've got to be on the watch for cars that fail to stop within ten feet of a street car discharging or taking on passengers, and you've got to get the guy who's driving with an open muffler, or hitting it down the wrong side of the street. It won't be long now before I'll have to be keeping track of the head and tail lights to see that they are lit. No——"

"Come on, you pinch five or six a day; you said so just a few minutes ago. Come on—just one. Honest, just one and then I'll quit."

"Well, there's one thing I want to warn you about," Wilcox finally agreed, as we changed hats and coats, and excitedly I began to fuss with the motorcycle. "Whatever you do, don't fall for any excuses. Be prepared to investigate any excuse that's made. You know the laws. Remember now!"

"I saw the outline of a cannon."

"They won't slip anything over on me," I says, not quite decided whether to tip the blue cap jauntily on the back of my head or let it tilt carelessly to one side.

An Easy Capture.

Speeders are like everything else, I guess. When you really want one bad, there's none around. I was anxious for one to come along quick, because I was afraid that if the delay was too long Wilcox would be taking back his stuff and I'd be robbed of my chance. When my chance did come, I lost not a second in getting started. I was out of that alley in no time. I wondered who the folks in the automobile could be. They were certainly bearing down at an awful pace, but the fact that we had spied them coming made the capture simple.

Wilcox was waiting for me when I got back to the "hole" in the alley. I suppose that a motorcycle cop really ought to be an automobile owner first; I was wearing the blue cap low over my eyes.

"I'm sure glad I followed that hunch to wait here instead of counting on meeting you down at the station," sneered the old timer. "Why in the devil didn't you make that pinch?"

"I'll tell you," I says, getting off the machine and stalling for time by slowly removing the big borrowed gloves, "everything went about as you said it would. They stopped right away and the driver got just as white as a flag of truce. I couldn't say much at first because I was all out of breath, but as soon as the driver could collect his thoughts he told me that he didn't know he was going so fast. His voice shook awful."

"Old stuff," muttered Wilcox sarcastically. "They all say that. And was that why you let him go?"

"I should say not," I interrupted. "I told him I couldn't see anything the matter with his speedometer. But one of the women—there were three women in the back seat—one of the women sat real stiff and acted offended and said they'd lived in Chicago all their lives and had never violated any laws yet."

"And you were big enough boob to let that influence you."

"I should say not," I retorted. "I told them that didn't make any difference; that I knew they'd just broken one law anyhow. They couldn't soften me with that dope. But the fellow sitting beside the driver butted in then and insisted that they were hurrying to get a doctor."

"The doctor gag, eh!"

"Wait a minute. I offered to ride along with them until we got to the doctor's office. O, I was willing to investigate, but the fellow who was driving started to laugh from the teeth out and talk about something else. He was still white around the lips, though."

"I see—one of those kidders, huh. They're the worst brand," poohed Wilcox. "Any time they think they can work me with a line of vaudeville talk."

"I didn't listen to him," I broke in. "I didn't care about the jokes nor the story that they were buying the car on time, but——"

"Well, but what?"

"You know I told you, Mr. Wilcox, that I didn't know anything about automobiles. I only get to ride in them at funerals and at election time. I never fooled around one any. I couldn't dispute him on it. There was nothing for me to do but let him go. He——"

"Well?"

"I couldn't dispute him. 'Since you must know why we were going so fast,' he apologized finally, just before he drove off, 'since you must know—why, the reason is that the pipe line's stopped up and she takes the gas all in a bunch.' And you know, Mr. Wilcox, you never told me what to do in a case like that."

by Edwin Balmer

Herewith is presented the fourteenth installment of a fiction serial dealing with what might happen should European powers, after they had settled their own differences, wage war upon the United States. The author, one of the best fiction writers in the country, has based his story upon a thorough understanding of military, naval, and internal conditions in the United States and upon a sound knowledge of military and economic history. The story will cause you to realize the critical situation in which this country and you, your neighbors, and your family are placed by the let-well-enough-alone attitude of the pacifists.

SYNOPSIS.

In Elgin, Ill., live the Ashby family, consisting of Nathan Ashby, owner of the Ashby Brass company, and his wife; a daughter, Nellie, married to Bob Wendell, a navy lieutenant; and Jim Ashby, a son engaged to Agnes Ware. Nathan Ashby is the archetype of pacifist, deaf to the impending danger to America. Almost out of a clear sky news is received that the United States scout cruiser, Salem, proceeding against orders in the North Atlantic, has encountered the fleet of the league of former European enemies, and has been sunk, a deliberate act of war. Bob is recalled to Newport News. A legion of spies swarm the country and spies are even enlisted in the army. Jim, against the protests of Agnes, joins the army. The United States fleet, outnumbered two to one by the league ships, and crippled by lack of men, scout cruisers, destroyers, and battle cruisers, engages the enemy fleet and is defeated after a gallant fight. The Arizona, Bob's ship, sinks and Bob is rescued from his turret by a comrade after Bob had made his subordinates seek safety ahead of him. A cabinet meeting is called to meet the perilous situation in which the country is placed. An angry mob surrounds the White House. Admiral Poe, who has lost two sons by the administration's neglect of the navy, drives the secretary of the navy from the White House; General Stone, of the general staff, forces the reluctant politician president to sign an order for universal compulsory service. Jim, encamped with his regiment in Chicago, receives orders to march to the defense of New York. Before leaving Chicago, Jim discovers Marion Marlatt, the girl he met in the house of the regent's spies, in the uniform of an aviator, and disguised as a boy. She tells him she has turned patriot or rather that she always has been patriotic to America, although her uncle was a spy. Jim does not know whether to believe her or not.

[Copyright: 1916: By The Chicago Tribune.]

SHE turned from him abruptly without offering explanation, and seemed suddenly entirely absorbed in the black landscape the other side of the car door. Jim observed her a moment as she buttoned her blouse jacket close about her neck again and drew on her heavy gloves. Her whole attitude said to him more plainly than words, "Well, what are you going to do about it?"

He did not know, and he was aware that she knew that he did not. Her explanation of herself—though once she all but had won him with it—of course was absurd. fantastic. It accounted in no way for her business there, in aviator's garb, on the train; nor had she offered reason for her going through the train at the risk of being recognized, as she was. She fastened her gloves, but still stood with her back to him, waiting; and, as he realized that she was watching his indecision as he mirrored himself in the black glass before her, he turned to the other door of the vestibule.

The train was rushing steadily at much more than moderate speed through a flat farming country; houses rather close together and now a tall spired church told that the train was approaching a town; and Jim, gazing out, wondered idly for an instant what place it might be. A click behind him caused him to jerk about. Marion Marlatt had lifted the platform stop before the other door and, as he turned, she pulled the door in and ran down the car steps.

"What are you doing?" he cried, and grabbed at her; she escaped his fingers and crouched on the lowest step.

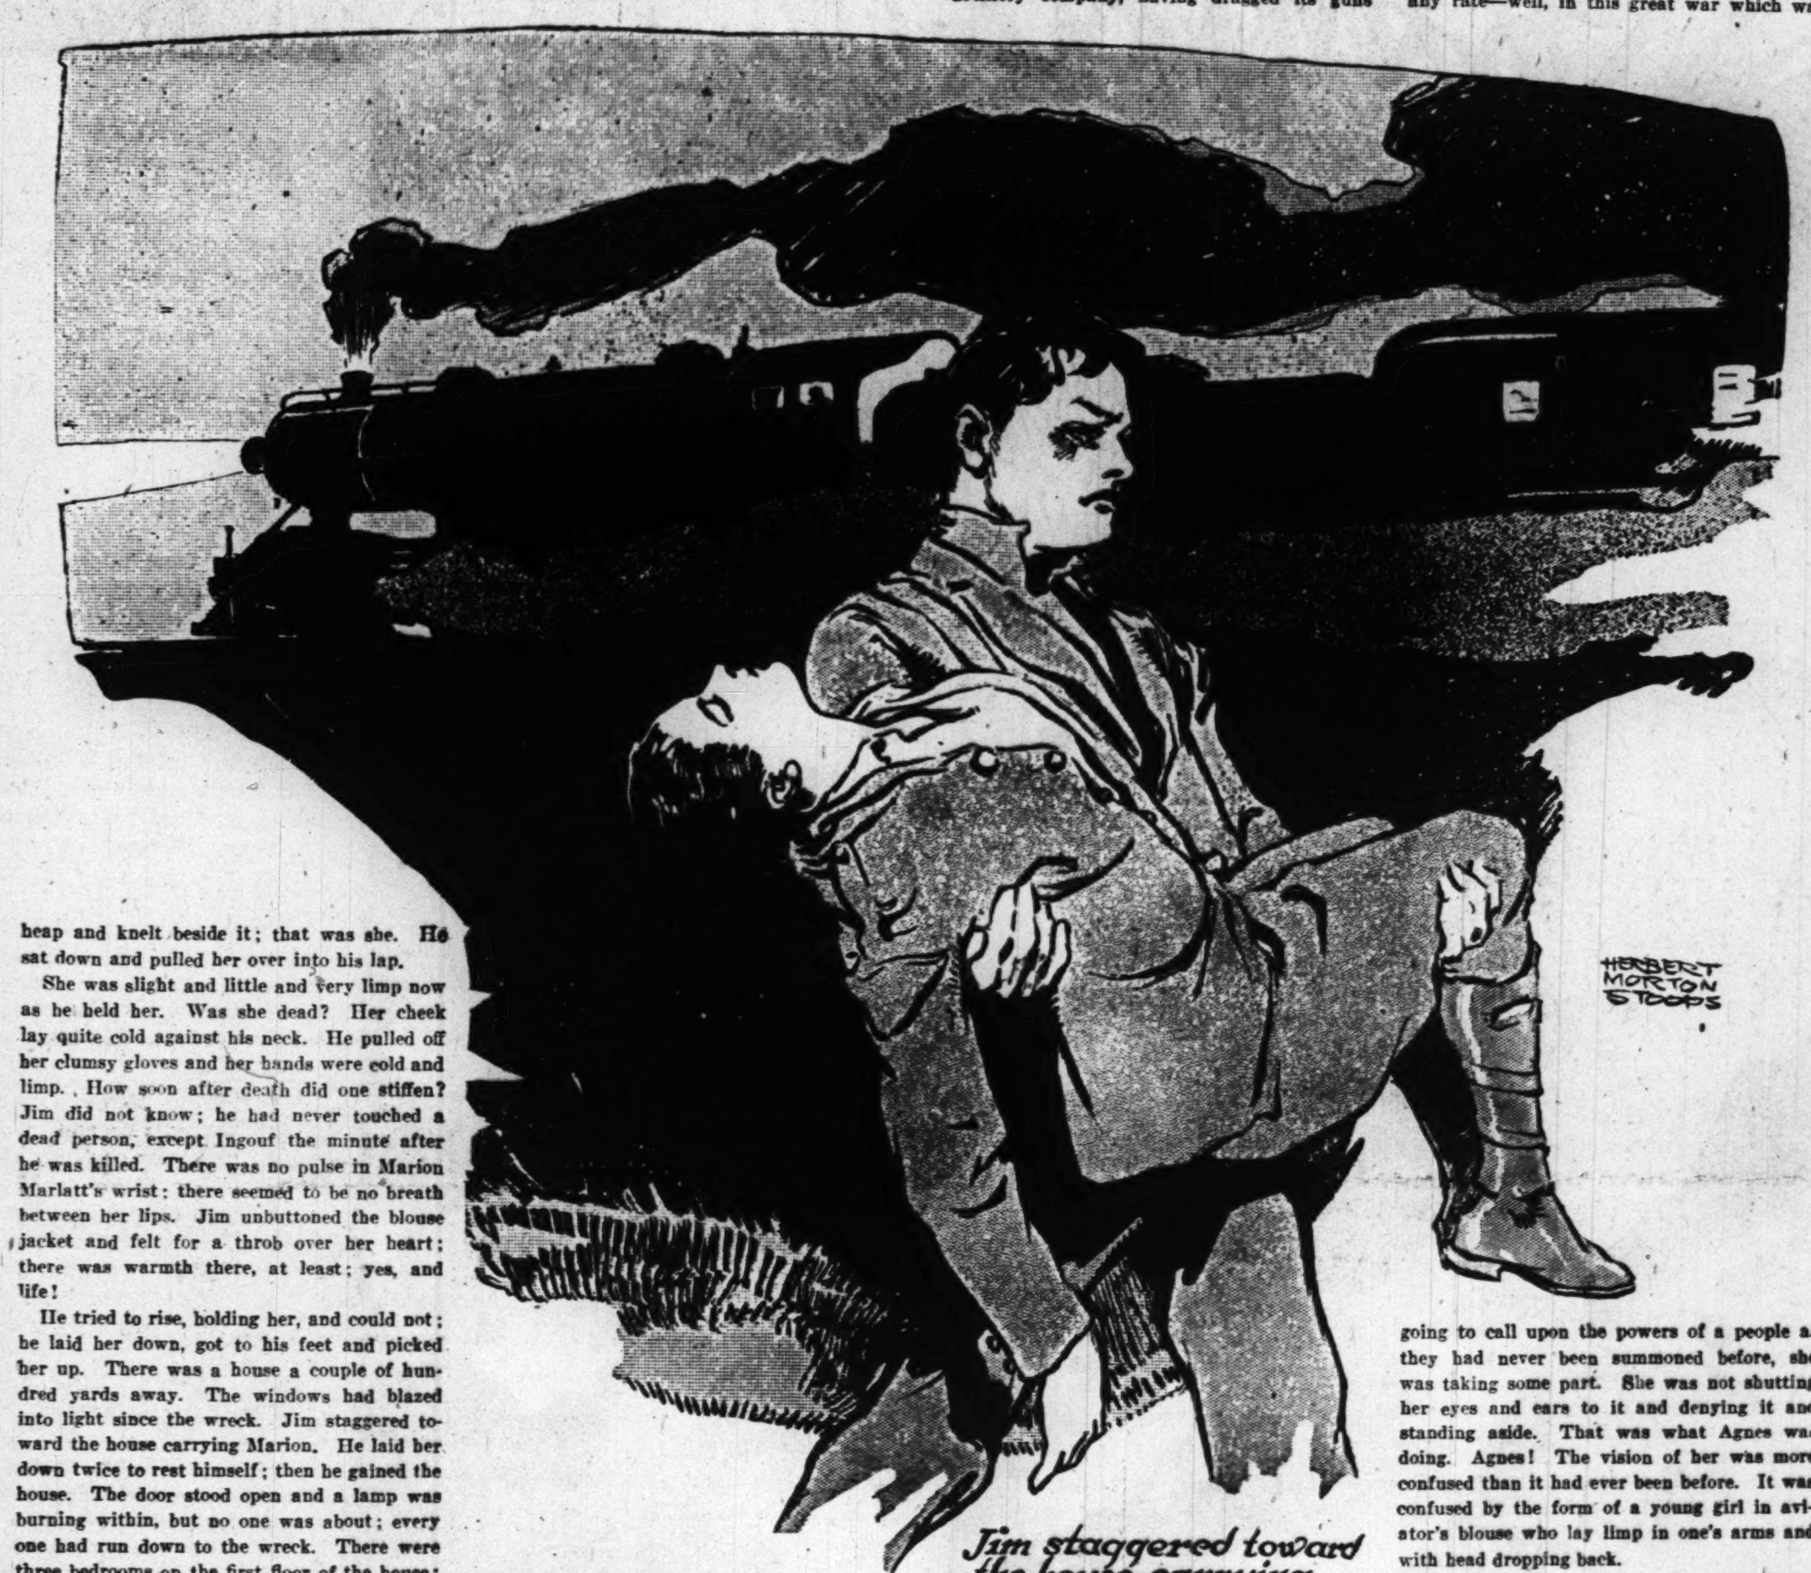
"Come back!" he ordered; but as he shouted to her she leaped. The train dashed on and her slight figure was lost from the light from the car. Jim, halted for the instant, now balanced on the bottom step, he swung down and let go, trying to run as his feet struck the ground, but he stumbled, fell, and rolled over and over. He had leaped over the rock ballast of the roadbed and landed in soft, soggy loam which tripped him and sent him tumbling, but without serious hurt. The train had passed, it was only a speeding streak of yellow light far down the track when Jim sat up and dizzily took stock of himself and tried to get up on his feet.

Why he had leaped after Marion Marlatt was not yet entirely clear in his mind; whether he had done it because, believing she was a spy, he meant to try to prevent her escape or because he realized that, after such a leap, she must be hurt and must need aid he did not know. He got to his feet, still somewhat stunned, and swayed as he stared after the train. It was half a mile away now and rushing swiftly, steadily when suddenly the front cars, next the middle rows of lighted windows, now the end of the rows of light plunged forward and vanished. A roaring detonation came down the breeze, then a crash, the hoarse hiss of escaping steam, an explosion; a flare of flame shot up. Jim gasped and groped in the dark for support; he steadied himself and started to run. He knew now what had happened; down there beyond the town—at some sort of bridge or culvert—the roadbed had been dynamited in front of the engine; and engine and cars together had crashed down and disappeared.

"She knew it! That's why she jumped! She was in on it!" Jim gasped to himself over and over as he ran. "She knew it was coming!"

He stumbled over something and fell forward very hard; when he got up he noticed a long shadow before him from some light behind. He looked about and saw the headlight of another train coming from the west—undoubtedly another troop train from Chicago. Jim scrambled up on the grade and ran up the track toward the headlight, waving his arms. The train slowed and stopped; he screamed his warning to the engineer. The train crew and armed men—Jim saw the crossed sabers of Mart's cavalry regiment—crowded about him. Jim told them what had happened and the armed men ran down the track ahead of the engine, which now slowly proceeded. Jim refused their invitation to go aboard the train; he stepped to the side of the track and waited till it was gone.

It was all dark again about him, but he was near the spot where Marion Marlatt had leaped from the car step; and he had seen something huddled in a heap on the soft ground a little away from the track. He went to the heap and knelt beside it; that was she. He sat down and pulled her over into his lap.



Jim staggered toward the house carrying Marion.

She was slight and little and very limp now as he held her. Was she dead? Her cheek lay quite cold against his neck. He pulled off her clumsy gloves and her hands were cold and limp. How soon after death did one stiffen? Jim did not know; he had never touched a dead person, except Ingouf the minute after he was killed. There was no pulse in Marion Marlatt's wrist; there seemed to be no breath between her lips. Jim unbuttoned the blouse jacket and felt for a throb over her heart; there was warmth there, at least; yes, and life!

He tried to rise, holding her, and could not; he laid her down, got to his feet and picked her up. There was a house a couple of hundred yards away. The windows had blazed into light since the wreck. Jim staggered toward the house carrying Marion. He laid her down twice to rest himself; then he gained the house. The door stood open and a lamp was burning within, but no one was about; every one had run down to the wreck. There were three bedrooms on the first floor of the house; two had been occupied, the bedding used; the third room was a spare room with clean linen on the bed. Jim bore Marion Marlatt to this bed and laid her down. He took off her little boots and her puttees; he loosened her blouse further and was looking about for water or brandy when he heard some one running. A woman, breathless and excited, entered and saw him.

"They sent me back!" she explained to Jim her return to her own house. "They sent me back to get the beds ready and make bandages; there are hundreds dying, they say—O, it's awful!"

"Have you brandy?" Jim asked.

The woman found it and he led her to the spare room.

"A girl!" the woman cried. "O, the lovely, sweet thing! O, sir, is she yours?"

Jim shook his head. "No; I just—found her beside the track."

The woman touched Marion Marlatt's cheek with awe. "The lovely thing! O, the sweet, lovely little lady!"

"She's only fainted, I think. I'll leave her with you now," Jim said, and went unsteadily out of the house.

The wreck was burning or the rescuers had lit a great bonfire near it to give light for their work; Jim turned toward the glare and found a road which led to the fire. It was the wreck which was burning. There had been a bridge over a stream which now was almost dry; the first span of the bridge had been blown up and engine and cars plunged headlong into the bed of the river.

It was a bad wreck indeed; the men of Jim's battalion who had escaped serious injury and the cavalrymen from the following train were pulling form after form out of the ruins of the cars. They put out the flames now with water from the stream. At last a long line of bodies lay on the river bank; another row of the desperately injured lay awaiting removal; the country road was full of farmer's carts and men with improvised stretchers bearing moaning and delirious men to the nearest shelters. Jim found himself sick and shaky as he set himself to help.

This dynamiting a bridge in front of a troop train was, of course, simply an act of war; this was only the carrying out of one of the many score of such plans as he had read in the secret orders to the regent's agents in the house of the spies—those orders which Marion Marlatt had been helping to prepare. But the horror, the barbarity of those orders had not been able to reach him in full till now. This—these rows of dead, those lines of dying and mangled men destroyed, not in fair battle but by stealth or treachery while they were asleep—this was what one of those orders meant.

Could Marion Marlatt have realized it, Jim challenged himself almost continually as he worked. Could she—that lovely little woman whom he had left on that white bed—could she have had any part at all in this? She had lain like a child in his arms; and how she flared at him and brought the blood hot to his cheeks when she denied that she was a spy! O, was it possible that she knew nothing of this? Might it be that his accusation of her had driven her to leap from the train, that moment when he turned away, and that she had no knowledge that the bridge there was about to be destroyed? Jim was steadier and stronger while he was convincing himself of that.

Now everything had been done which might be done for the injured; Jim turned away from the wreck and wandered back toward the house where he had left Marion Marlatt. He went in through the open door; the house had become a tiny hospital, and in the spare room where Marion Marlatt had been a recruit now lay with a country doctor working over him.

"Where is she—the girl I brought here?" Jim demanded of the woman.

"O, we brought her about right quick!" the woman boasted. "She wasn't hurt much—the lovely little lady; she was only a bit faint and dizzy."

"Where did she go?"

The woman didn't know; she supposed the girl went down toward the wreck. Anyway, she went out by herself and quite all right, the woman thought, though in queer clothes.

CORPORAL ASHBY.

The notes of a bugle echoed over the field. Jim did not recognize the call, but its meaning was obvious; the scattered infantrymen and cavalrymen were being recalled. Jim returned to the track. Two more trains from the west had come up and stopped behind the troop train which had brought the cavalry. The headlight of a westbound train glared at the wreck from the other side of the river; other trains stood in a long line behind it. Some of the passengers from those trains from the east crossed the river and mingled with the soldiers. These passengers were refugees, too, of the sort which Jim had seen in the station at Chicago. Jim heard first from one of these refugees—a woman—that soldiers under the direction of officers were stripping certain of the dead.

That was so, for some of the dead wore uniforms; they had been in the militia; and, if the battalion—or what was left of it—was to pretend to any military appearance, all the uniforms must be saved. Jim found the place where his company was rallying. A roll call at dawn showed a muster of forty-six men in company F either unhurt or only slightly injured. Kilbane was among those merely bruised, Swenson had been cut by glass, but both he and the Irish boy were able to go on. Connor, the platoon commander, had both legs broken. He sent his uniform to the captain with the suggestion that it would fit Private Ashby, who could be recommended to replace Corporal Kent, who was killed.

Jim bundled the uniform under his arm. He selected a good rifle from the heap recovered from the wreck and supplied himself with equipment as he could. With the other forty-five men of company F, he waded the stream. Refugees from the opposite side passed, wading to the west bank. They were to get on the troop trains which now were to return to Chicago. The soldiers were crossing to board the other trains, which would be turned back at once to New York. Women and children waded into the little river. The recruits picked them up and carried them across. Then, as more soldiers splashed across and crowded behind company F went to the last train beyond the bridge. The survivors of company E already were on board. Company G, sixty men strong, and company H, with seventy-five, followed. Men of other battalions also got on board. An artillery company, having dragged its guns across the stream, loaded the pieces upon the express cars. The artillerymen came back into the coaches.

An hour after sunrise the train at last got away. By noon, running through Ohio, it began to pass trains full of refugees who had fled from the coast after it was known that the American fleet was destroyed. Company F ate once during the day. It was at Cleveland, about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The train stopped there to change engines. There were no arrangements made to supply the soldiers. The company officers learned that the train would stay there for at least half an hour and every one was told to go out and forage for himself.

Jim, having money of his own, took Kilbane, who had none, and Swenson, who was saving his, up to Statler's. It was crowded, like the hotels in Chicago, with refugees from the coast, and each hour more were arriving, but soldiers on their way to the front were being served at a great board in the dining room and no one in uniform—or with a military armband—needed any money. In the barber shop Jim changed to Connor's uniform, after ripping off the shoulder straps. He and Kilbane and Swenson ran back to the train then, only to wait an hour in the cars; next they shifted to other cars to make room for Ohio militia battalions, which were ordered east also. At 5 o'clock the train at last got away. Corporal Ashby flung himself back in his seat and closed his eyes.

His country seemed all chaos about him. Ahead all appeared to be terror and flight. Yet the regular army—or most of it—must be on the coast, and the militia of the eastern states, recruited to thrice or four times their former strength, were there, and they were all in control of the general staff now. That had been officially announced. That meant that every soldier was moving in accord to one purpose and that purpose continuous, consistent and thought out. But opposed to that purpose still must be powerful political influences, both in Washington and in every state and city in the country. There were other sorts of traitors, too, and the spies and secret agents. These had blown up bridges in other places as well as in northern Indiana. A Missouri regiment had been all but destroyed in southern Illinois; a Detroit troop train had also plunged to disaster; and where the trains had not been destroyed all travel on a score of great trunk lines was halted at the moment that the American censors passed the news that the enemy's troops had begun landing on Long island.

And, strangely, as Jim learned of these other disasters, the wreck which he had just escaped and which had killed or disabled half the comrades of his battalion, became in his mind a more natural, comprehensible, and less dastardly thing; and Marion Marlatt returned therefore, to his thoughts in a different way. What difference, if men were killed, whether they are crushed in a wreck or blown to pieces by shells. If she had had part in the planning of that wreck she was only serving her side. If she could help to prevent regiments from arriving in the east in time to oppose the first advance of the regent's armies she was winning a battle before it was fought. At any rate—well, in this great war which was going to call upon the powers of a people as they had never been summoned before, she was taking some part. She was not shutting her eyes and ears to it and denying it and standing aside. That was what Agnes was doing. Agnes! The vision of her was more confused than it had ever been before. It was confused by the form of a young girl in aviator's blouse who lay limp in one's arms and with head dropping back.

How her blue eyes had flamed and the color flushed her cheek when she told him she was as good an American as he, and running at least as much risk to do her bit! Could that be true? And if it was true, what did it mean? Did it mean that, with some of the secrets of the regent's spies, she was coming to the American side? There was risk indeed in that! But the peril would only make it appeal the more to her! She—well, if she was on the right side, what a part she might play! It was strange that, after their first encounter in her uncle's house, they should have encountered each other so soon again. Might it mean that fate would continue to point their paths together? Jim, smiling, went to sleep.

He roused many times during the night. Sometimes he was conscious that the train was passing long, westbound rows of cars. Twice, at stations, his car stood beside a westbound car. The windows of both coaches were open. Jim heard women's voices and children crying. Once a quiet, sweet voice asked for water. There was none in the coach with the children. Jim handed into the other car window the cup which was handed him. Then his train moved on. It was running rapidly when next he stirred. There was talk in the aisle of orders for the highest speed. Jim wondered, sleepily, what new emergency had arisen. He drifted back into dreams. It was broad day when he suddenly sat up, fully awake. The sun was shining through the windows on the other side of the car and the sunshine was in his face.

"Poughkeepsie!" some one was saying. "That's Poughkeepsie we just passed. We're only a couple of hours now above the big stop—the biggest city in the world now, you know. And they're all trying to get away."

THE FLIGHT FROM NEW YORK.

Jim gazed out the open window at his elbow; a wide river with high banks lay before him—the Hudson a few miles below Poughkeepsie. A larger passenger steamer of the sort which ply between New York and Albany was midstream, steaming north. Its decks were crowded with people far beyond any legal limit; indeed, it was evidqnt, even from the train, that no more people possibly could be packed aboard. A brown freight steamer—an ocean tramp, whose pilot plainly was following the deepest channel as shown by the course of the Albany boat—was closed behind; it carried no cargo; it was high out of the water, but its decks were jammed with passengers and heads protruded from the open port.

Other light seagoing craft and harbor boats now appeared. There was a tug, belching black smoke, towing a string of lighters and scows; people packed the tug's narrow deck and the towboats were black and speckled with their human freight. Motor launches speeded swiftly up the river in the shallower waters near the graceful private yachts which rushed past the scows; the yachts were private no longer. The only space which was unoccupied was upon the crafts which were scurrying downstream; their decks were absolutely deserted. The fugitives no longer could be numbered by the thousands; they were countless.

"How long have we been passing that sort of thing?" Jim appealed in amazement to Kilbane.

"Since we've been beside the river," the Irishman returned. "I woke beyant Albany."

Thousands! There must be millions in flight. Across the river, below the high banks, the trains on the West Shore railroad were in plain sight. One long line of cars followed another, freight trains filling the gaps between passenger trains.

"They're hauling population be freight over there the same as here," Kilbane observed.

Jim gazed out the windows on the other side of his car. A freight train was passing: every car was crowded with people; the traffic on the two north bound tracks of the New York Central was almost continuous; empty trains were returning to the great city on the other south bound track.

"They're shelling New York, ye've heard." Kilbane explained.

"How?" Jim asked.

"Part by airship—dhropping bombs, ye know; part from the sea."

"From the sea? The Sandy Hook forts have fallen?"

"The ships that're doing the business are off beyant range from Sandy Hook. I heard they're over be Rockaway Beach tossing th' big burstin' boys over Bhrooklyn—a matther of fifteen or eighteen miles, they say."

The train rushed on.

"West Point over there!"

The highlands on the opposite side of the river were dotted with the tents of a huge camp and long lines of men were at work. "Digging trenches!"

"Looks like it. I suppose the first stand will be here after New York's given up."

"Given up? Does that," an arm pointed out to the channel filled with boats, "look like Stone's giving up New York?"

"You bet not! What's he hurrying us along for?"

"Breakfast under fire, boys!" Wray, the major, called from the door of the car. "I've just seen the last train order; we're routed right into Grand Central station!"

"Hurray! Hurray!" Corporal Jim was on his feet, his blood afire, cheering wildly with the rest.

"Where're we going then, major? Say, how's the fighting on Long island? They want us there, major?"

"Don't know, boys! I've told you all I know. We're going into New York; that'll be under fire."

Jim remained standing because almost every one else did. Breakfast under fire! New York being bombarded! He counted the cartridges in his belt over and over again automatically, unconsciously, and examined the mechanism of his gun.

"Sit down, boys! Everybody rest all you can, while you can!" It was the shout of company officer.

"'Tis sensible; they must be wantin' us; they're hurryin' us along."

Certainly the train was hurrying. Peekskill, Ossining, Tarrytown; they flashed by so swiftly that the crowds along the tracks had no time to cheer after seeing that the cars carried men with rifles.

"Dobbs Ferry!"

"Say, did you know there was that many people in the world?"

They were everywhere now; not only on boats and on trains; the roads were black with motor cars, trucks, wagons bearing people from the south; tens of thousands were on foot. These appeared to plod by families—man and a woman usually with children in arms or dragged by hand. Some of the men pushed peddlers' carts ahead of them piled up with bundles of their possessions; others bore pillowlike packs on their backs; thousands sat or lay on grass plots, lawns, along the walks of Yonkers, Spuyten Duyvil; now the train was rushing beside the Harlem river; it crossed into Manhattan, and above the noise of the cars there rose distinctly at persistent, regular intervals of seconds the sound of shells bursting in the city.

Fort Hancock, far out at the point of Sandy Hook, was replying, every one knew; perhaps Fort Wadsworth on Staten island and Fort Hamilton on the other side of the narrows was firing its guns; but the sound of the American guns came only as a low, distant rumble; the noise now and now and now was the detonation of great, high explosive shells striking only a mile or so farther south.

Suddenly the train stopped; it had not reached the station; it was still up above One Hundred and Tenth street; but something was the matter—perhaps only traffic congestion—farther on; the order came for the men to leave the train. The sound of the shells rose to monstrous, thunderous thudding; Jim took out his watch and timed the intervals between the eruptions; they came every six seconds, ten every minute as regular as the ticking of his watch.

"Boys, we can't try to form much here by the tracks," the company officers were calling. "Madison avenue's the next street west; every one get over there as quick as you can and bring all equipment, please! Rally at company flags. We'll form over there and call the roll."

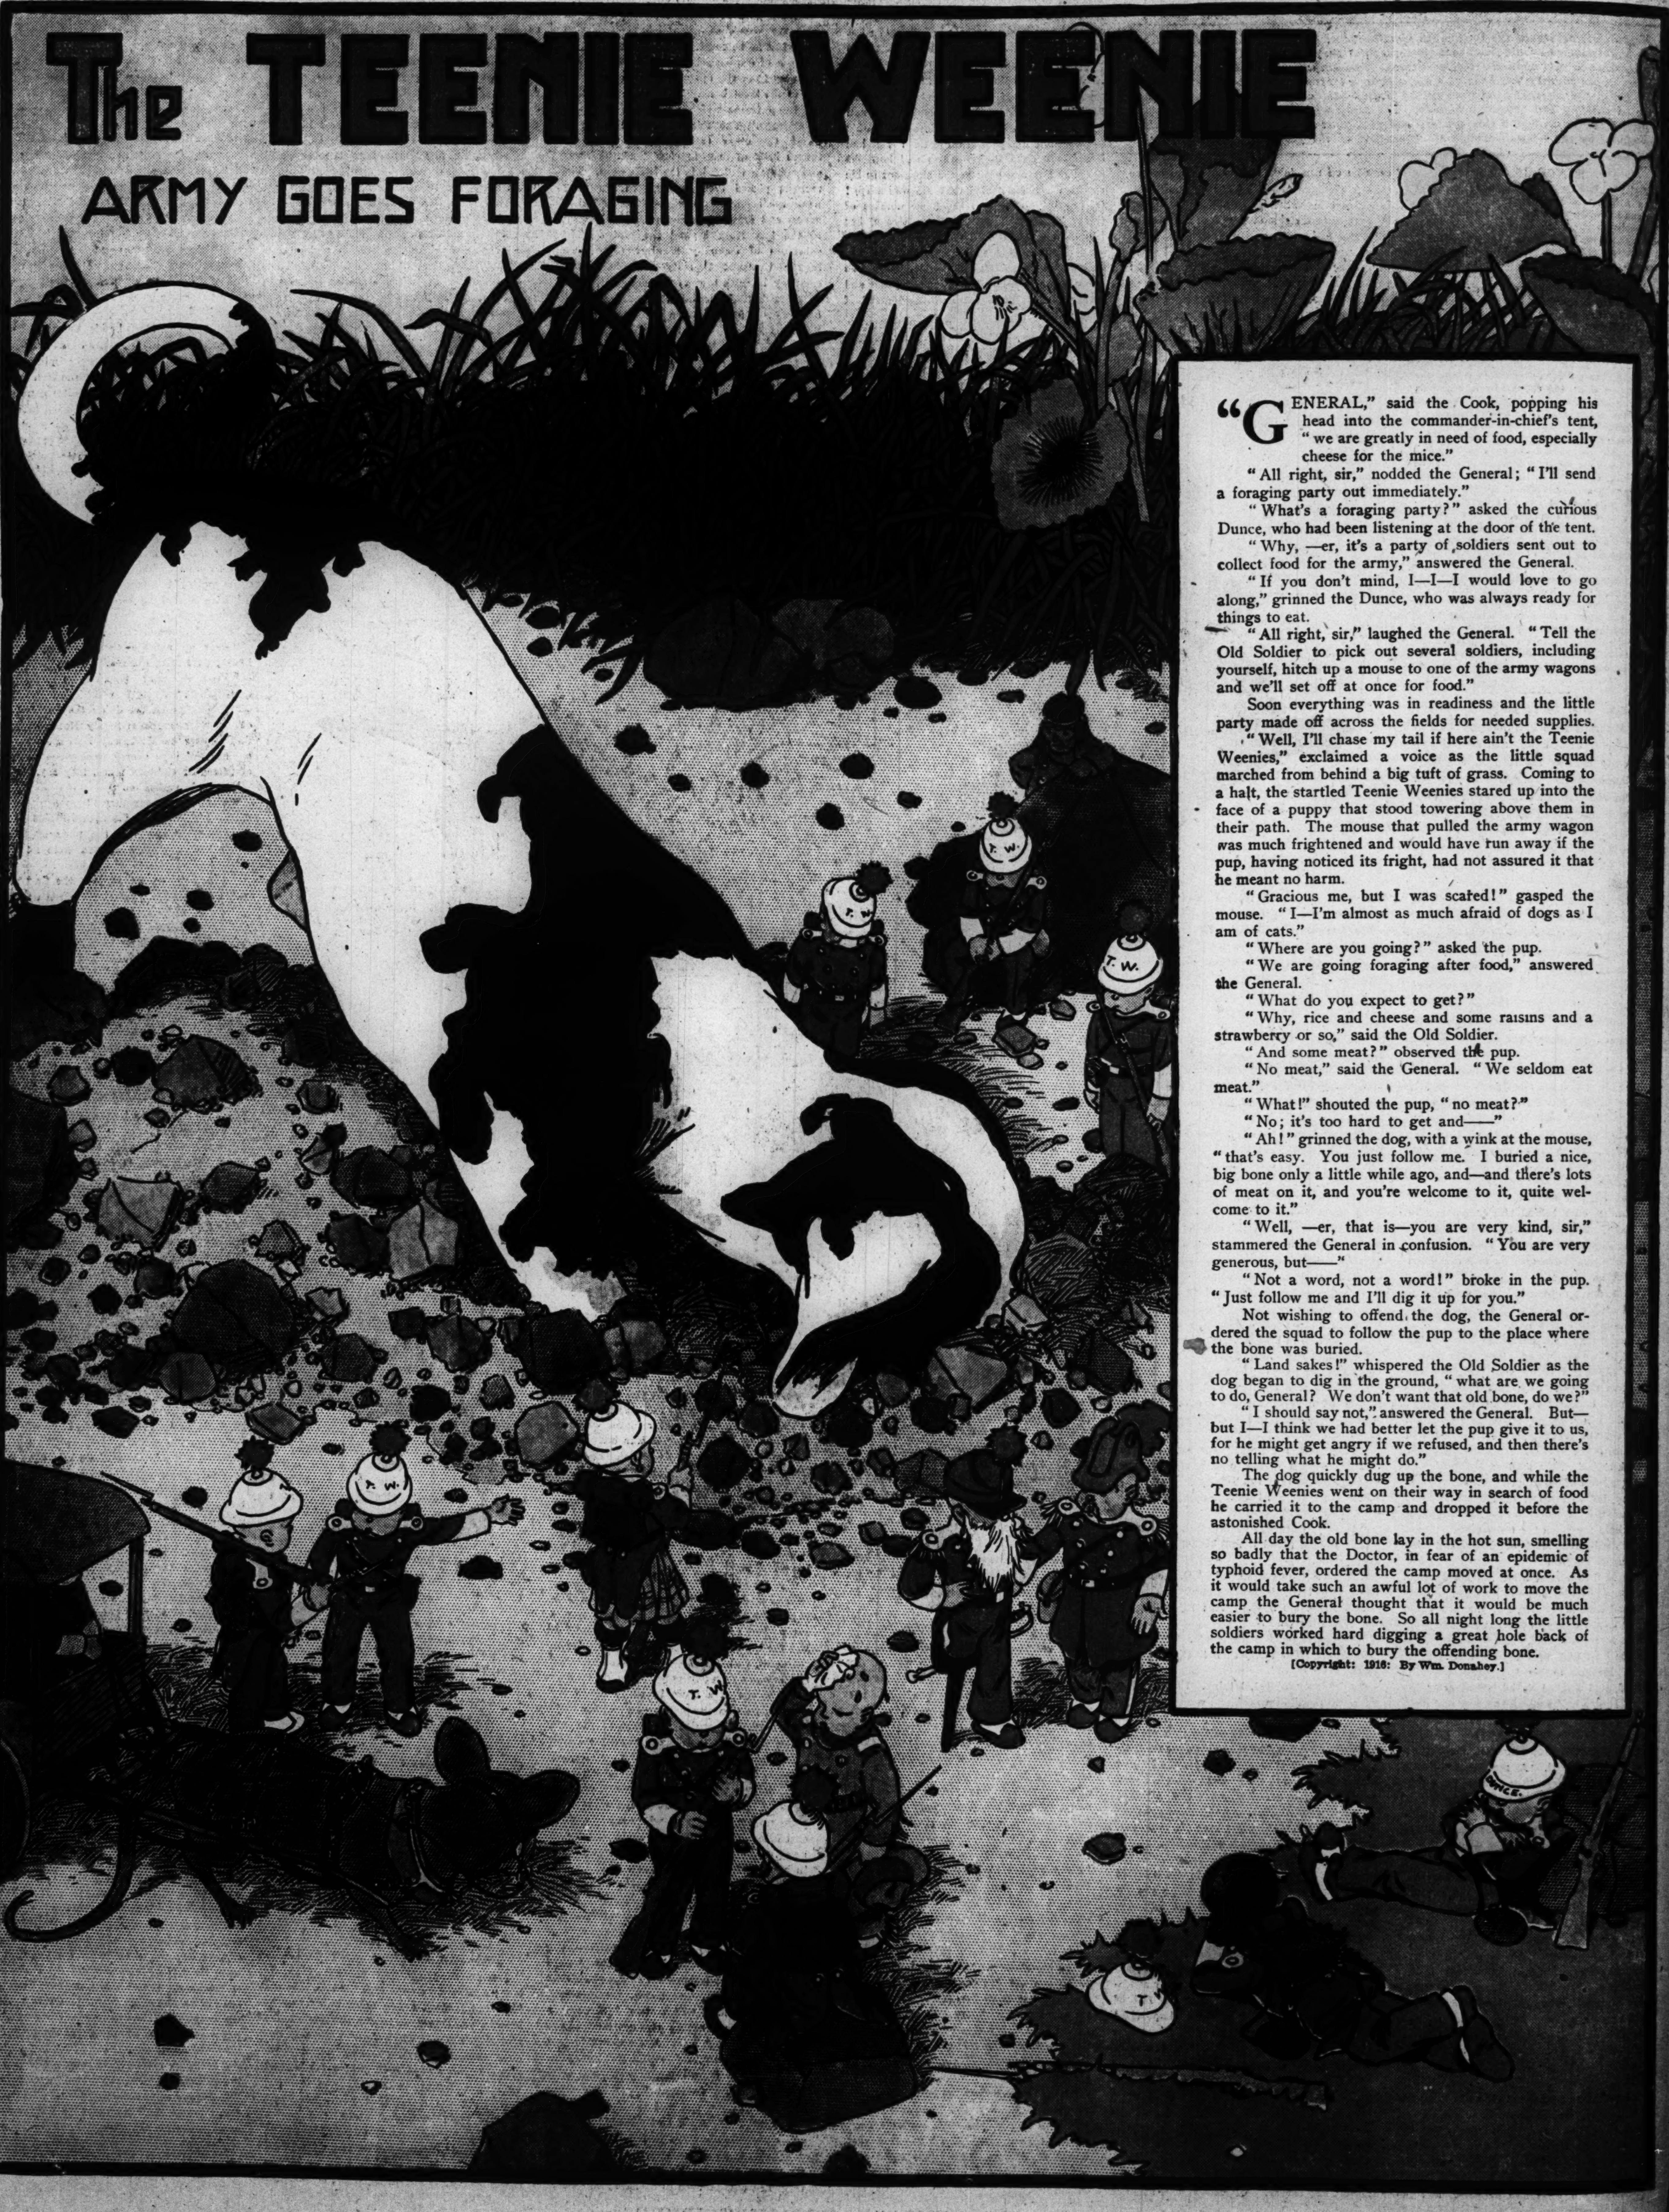
The TEENIE WEENIE
ARMY GOES FORAGING



"GENERAL," said the Cook, popping his head into the commander-in-chief's tent, "we are greatly in need of food, especially cheese for the mice."

"All right, sir," nodded the General; "I'll send a foraging party out immediately."

"What's a foraging party?" asked the curious Dunce, who had been listening at the door of the tent.

"Why, —er, it's a party of soldiers sent out to collect food for the army," answered the General.

"If you don't mind, I—I—I would love to go along," grinned the Dunce, who was always ready for things to eat.

"All right, sir," laughed the General. "Tell the Old Soldier to pick out several soldiers, including yourself, hitch up a mouse to one of the army wagons and we'll set off at once for food."

Soon everything was in readiness and the little party made off across the fields for needed supplies.

"Well, I'll chase my tail if here ain't the Teenie Weenies," exclaimed a voice as the little squad marched from behind a big tuft of grass. Coming to a halt, the startled Teenie Weenies stared up into the face of a puppy that stood towering above them in their path. The mouse that pulled the army wagon was much frightened and would have run away if the pup, having noticed its fright, had not assured it that he meant no harm.

"Gracious me, but I was scared!" gasped the mouse. "I—I'm almost as much afraid of dogs as I am of cats."

"Where are you going?" asked the pup.

"We are going foraging after food," answered the General.

"What do you expect to get?"

"Why, rice and cheese and some raisins and a strawberry or so," said the Old Soldier.

"And some meat?" observed the pup.

"No meat," said the General. "We seldom eat meat."

"What!" shouted the pup, "no meat?"

"No; it's too hard to get and——"

"Ah!" grinned the dog, with a wink at the mouse, "that's easy. You just follow me. I buried a nice, big bone only a little while ago, and—and there's lots of meat on it, and you're welcome to it, quite welcome to it."

"Well, —er, that is—you are very kind, sir," stammered the General in confusion. "You are very generous, but——"

"Not a word, not a word!" broke in the pup. "Just follow me and I'll dig it up for you."

Not wishing to offend the dog, the General ordered the squad to follow the pup to the place where the bone was buried.

"Land sakes!" whispered the Old Soldier as the dog began to dig in the ground, "what are we going to do, General? We don't want that old bone, do we?"

"I should say not," answered the General. But—but I—I think we had better let the pup give it to us, for he might get angry if we refused, and then there's no telling what he might do."

The dog quickly dug up the bone, and while the Teenie Weenies went on their way in search of food he carried it to the camp and dropped it before the astonished Cook.

All day the old bone lay in the hot sun, smelling so badly that the Doctor, in fear of an epidemic of typhoid fever, ordered the camp moved at once. As it would take such an awful lot of work to move the camp the General thought that it would be much easier to bury the bone. So all night long the little soldiers worked hard digging a great hole back of the camp in which to bury the offending bone.

A DELIGHTFUL simplicity is revealed in these lovely models that are developed from beautiful fabrics in most becoming colors. The dress in the upper corner is fashioned from an ink taffeta. The full skirt is gathered at the waistline, and on the sides a decorative touch is revealed in the pockets with their dainty plaitings and beadings. The plain bodice is buttoned down the front with smoked pearl buttons and facings of white taffeta. The quaint collar, gracefully folded away from the neck, is made of white organdie, and the same fabric is also used for the straightly cut cuffs that are slipped beneath the sleeve at the wrist. These extend just below the elbow and are simply trimmed with smoke pearl buttons.

The hat that is illustrated to the right of this model is of a dark blue milan, its helmetlike shape being almost concealed by the handsome ostrich feathers, which are tipped with a lighter blue.

Equally interesting is the frock of beige gabardeen that is depicted on the right. The bodice is cut in capelike style, so that a decidedly pleasing shoulder line is effected. While the softly fashioned collar also adds to the charm of this frock, a guimpe of white organdie with quaint puff sleeves enhances the picturesque style of this interesting model. Touches of light blue give a dash of gayety to this gown that would be ideal for summer wear.

The skirt hangs gracefully about the figure, and at the hem its flaring propensity is somewhat accentuated by the straps of fabric with which it is elaborated and the little ornaments flecked with blue.

Light blue milan is the color chosen for the smart hat that is closely set on the head. Its sole decoration is a band and a jaunty bow of grosgrain ribbon. A back view of this chapeau is also shown, as the shape is one of unusual elegance.

The third dress that is depicted on this page is made of Poiret twill in a delicate biscuit shade. As summer is here at last and fashion occasionally conforms to the needs of the season, this frock is designed with taffeta sleeves in matching shade. This silk is also used for the side panels, so that, after all, one finds that the taffeta is the dominating fabric in this crea-

Pink embroidery distinguishes the girdle, which extends about the sides and back, and this is also chosen to define the V shaped opening of the frock. As if to dispel any suggestion of too great severity, a novel ornament is developed in the embroidery and silk ties in the same tones still further add to its decoration.

Pink milan is favored for the close fitting hat, whose upturned brim reveals a beautiful line. The edge is bound with grosgrain silk and finished with a flat tailored bow.

MEN AND WOMEN

THE following letter came in to THE TRIBUNE a few days ago. A lively discussion among some of the members of the staff followed its reading. The why of the unfilled evenings and long, lonesome Sundays of young women of the type of her who writes the letter may not be solved to the satisfaction of all concerned, but solace, hope, and, better still, ideas for more strategical movements among "good but lonesome" feminine ranks, may be gained from printing herewith the opinions of those who participated in the discussion.

Good but Lonesome.

The young woman writes:

I believe there is a prevalent theory that men are looking for the girl who is sensible, honest, and a lady at all times; that, eventually, she will come into her own. If an old ladies' home is "her own," I am inclined to believe that this is true, otherwise I have begun to doubt it very much.

I am 23 and have practically brought myself up since I was 15 years of age. I had a grammar school and three years' high school education. I make my own dresses and hats, and think I usually look as well as my girl friends who live at home and spend more on their clothes. Experience has taught me how to spend my money to the best advantage. I always spend just a little less than I earn, and have started a bank account. I go to night school and try to further my education, so that I may some time live more like "people." And I have ambitions to being a short story writer, sometimes.

Now, what I would like to know, is why I spend my Sundays and evenings off, alone, in my little back room, while other girls that I know, who are shallow, frivolous, and hardly have room in their heads for a sensible idea, always have dates, places to go, and young men to go with; girls whose main idea is to have a "good time" at the fellow's expense. The men all voice their scorn for such girls as that, but they are the kind of girls who win them, just the same. And as many of that kind marry good men, too.

I am considerate of a man's money, for I have earned my own long enough to know that it doesn't grow on bushes, and companionship means more to me than what is spent on me. Then I have a longing for a home, an article which I have never possessed, and I have seen girls all about me, married, who would rather live in light housekeeping rooms than to make one. The irony of the thing is discouraging—I would almost say disgusting.

I have actually found that I "knocked" myself by saying that I did not frequent cabarets. One young man made the inconsistent remark to me that I was "the kind of a girl a man wanted to marry, but not the kind he wanted to go with." I am known among them all as "a good, sensible girl." Grant's monument is a grand piece of statuary, too, but when we have a look at it we are content to move on!

I am not a blue stocking, going about with a pair of "specs" and a dictionary under my arm. I am jolly and have a keen sense of humor, and am starved for companionship and affection, but I have come to the conclusion that it doesn't pay to be too good. Other girls with less conscience are getting just as much out of life.

Regarding M. G.'s letter, members of THE TRIBUNE staff express opinions thus:

"Methinks the lady doth protest too much to the young men, thereby frightening them. Why make a point of telling them she cares not for cabarets, values companionship more than money, etc.? It's my opinion that if she'd get herself up as attractively as the 'other kind' of girls and then pitch in and just show 'em how good a time they could have with her in her way, she'd meet with vurr' much better success. Anyhow, she's sure wekkum to my opinion," says M. T.

"Let not ambition as a short story writer mock the profitable toil of needle work on dainty frills and furbelows to lure and captivate the male," says B. R.

"I can see myself of four or five years ago reflected exactly in M. G.'s letter, with exactly the same attitude toward life. But I saw this attitude wasn't helping matters any, so I decided that I must try other tactics. I quit knocking for one thing and I made more of an effort to be nice to the few I did need and I went out of my way to get acquainted. If I had contrary views from those I met, I kept still, and if I didn't approve of some of the things I saw I was mum. I found out that it's all very well to have innate high minded ideas about cabarets, etc., but that you have to choose your audience in airing these, says H. W.

"The way to a man's heart is not entirely through his stomach. His heart is oftener reached through his affections. Avoid extremes in the matter of demonstration, neither indulging overly nor refraining puritanically and surely no girl need spend many evenings alone. (I hope Doris Blake doesn't see this)," says L. J. B.

"M. G., you've certainly set up some problem for us to solve. If you want a hemale's views I will plunge on:

"To begin with, are you pretty? Do you wear pretty clothes? If you aren't, the first you are up against a big barrier right there, for though man may stand up and rumble for weeks about wanting a good sensible girl, it isn't himself that's speaking; it's the voice of What He Was Taught To Believe.

"What he really says is: 'Give me red lips, pretty eyes, soft cheeks, round arms, sympathy.'

"And if you haven't these in this city of red hot competition, you're up against it. Of course, clothes can do a lot; if you don't believe it, look about you at the mediocre looking girls who are successful with beaus.

"Now, remembering that there is a mighty urge that magnetically attracts people to each other, sometimes to hold them only an instant, sometimes for life, how long do you think John Jones or Bill Smith is going to call on you and sit in strained position on the parlor settee, listening to you talk?

"This is a wild little age you're living in, M. G., and if you would believe the popular songs, peopled with wild men. To paraphrase further, 'where there are wild men there must be wild women,' and, while I don't advocate anything heretical, I'd forget if I were you that you are such a nice girl.

"Men and women are seeking gayety. They want it every minute. When they are through seeking it they marry. And gayety seeking men don't want good, sensible girls for companions, I know. I'm one of them. The popular formula is, 'half common sense and half frivolity.'

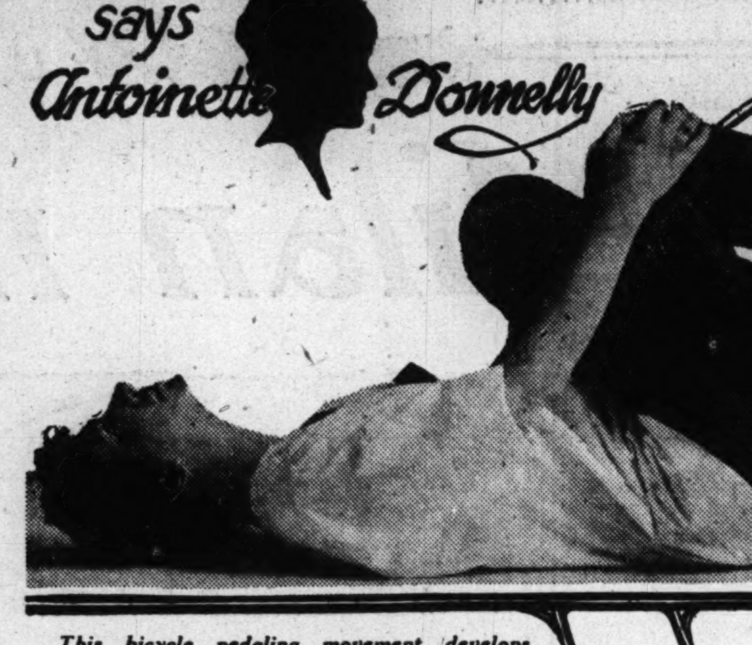
"But it all settles down to this: some day a man will come along, look into your eyes, and say, 'heaven,' and you will clutch his hand and say 'paradise,' and then, M. G., you won't be writing any more letters to the paper.

"And way down deep, M. G., I doubt very much if you're such a darn sensible girl after all," says G. S.

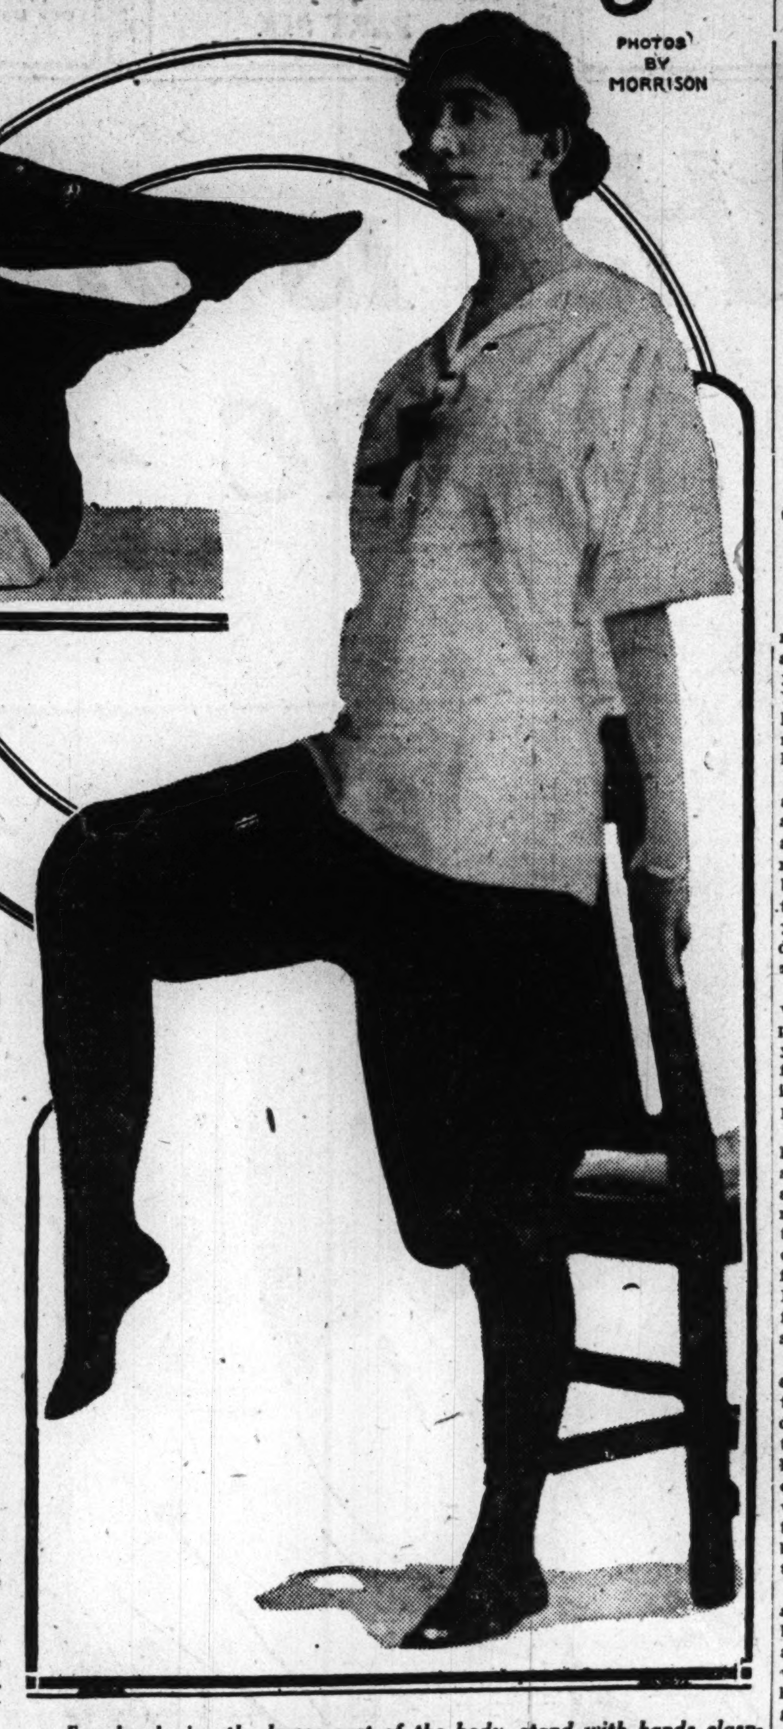
ANTOINETTE DONNELLY.

How I Added 15 Pounds in Three Weeks to Helene Barnette's Weight.

says Antoinette Donnelly



This bicycle pedaling movement develops thighs, hips, and lower back. With hands clasping knees, thighs flexed on abdomen, foot extended, toes pointing outward, push legs forward alternately with resistance.



PHOTOS BY MORRISON

For developing the lower part of the body, stand with hands clasping chair, as illustrated, back bent slightly backward; then raise right knee as high as possible; repeat movement five times with right knee; then alternate with left five times, increasing to twenty or thirty times.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

LAST Sunday I gave the measurements of my model, Helene Barnett, showing a gain of a couple of inches in bust and hips as a result of twelve pounds additional weight I succeeded in putting on her in two weeks' time.

Another week's strict adherence to the rules I laid down for her as to her diet, sleep, daily deep breathing exercises, which I shall explain later, has resulted in a further gain of three pounds, making to date a total of fifteen pounds in three weeks.

As I explained in last week's article, I worked two weeks with Miss Barnett before any satisfactory result was attained. During these two weeks she gained [illegible] and one-half pounds, but a slight attack of illness made her lose them again. So that her gain of the twelve pounds occurred during the third and fourth weeks' work.

So, you see, my thin sisters, you must not get discouraged in the beginning. Stick to my instructions and you will no doubt be rewarded as was Miss Barnett.

Putting on weight, as I have said before, is a much more difficult feat than reducing, the reason being that the foods that make for weight are the very foods the extremely thin woman has either lost appetite for or never had it. And then it takes time to train yourself away from that restless, nervous energy expending habit which many thin folk are guilty of, and to train the lungs to better expansion through correct breathing, and also to give your worn system time to recuperate in sleep.

Miss Barnett, like many thin women, had pampered her appetite to a point where she really did not eat sufficiently of the carbohydrates and fats to maintain her body at a degree of strength that would permit of any effort other than that which her day's work simply demanded.

A medical examination disclosed the fact that she had no digestive, gastric, or intestinal trouble. Therefore it was a matter of will power more than anything else to acquire a taste for the fat producing foods.

A fact of importance you should know is this: If a person's ideal weight is 150 pounds, and he weighs 175, his body contains about forty-seven and one-half pounds of fat. This fat serves him as so much fuel in case of emergency. If he misses a few meals or passes through an unusual physical strain it is drawn upon to supply energy for this particular occasion.

Fats, as fuel, go twice as far as carbohydrates or proteins. One pound of fat performs the work of two pounds of flesh. A thin person falls back on her own muscular tissue more quickly in an emergency than a fat one, and loses weight twice as rapidly and with more weakening effects. Consequently the fat gain and the thin lose more readily.

When there is an incessant demand for fuel as created by the overenergetic, restless temperament, the consequences are fatal to the thin woman. A curtailment of activity is the first step, therefore, in the right direction.

A good healthy tire is a good means of arriving at this curtailment of activity. By that I mean a daily walk—two if necessary—to induce a restful sleep. Another thing, you must say: "I will not use up my energy by futile, pointless gadding and running about." The results, as exemplified by my model, Miss Barnett, more than justify the determination to reform the habit of energy extravagance.

Strenuous exercise, as necessary for reducing weight, is not advisable in the attempt to put on weight. However, exercises in mild form each day are necessary to increase the circulation of the blood and to whet the appetite.

Miss Barnett found walking to be the best exercise for sharpening the appetite. Before she began my instructions she did little of it. Now she takes a long walk twice a day, either in the morning or afternoon and before retiring at night, sometimes walking four and five miles and never less than three. She found her sleeping hours to be lengthened and less and less disturbed as she continued the walking habit before retiring. The deep breathing was not neglected by her as she walked, and one of the most obvious happy results was a better color in her face, and a becoming fullness, too. Another was the chest expansion of a couple of inches, and the improvement in the appearance of her neck, especially at its base. The hollows are filling out remarkably, due to the deep breathing exercises and the massage.

A deep breathing exercise which Miss Barnett has practiced every day and never less than three times a day is this: Stand before an open window with arms at side; slowly raise arms in outward circle up over head until hands touch, inhaling deeply as this upward movement is made; then slowly let arms fall in outward circle movement back to original position, exhaling as arms are brought down. Do this twenty times at each session. If twenty tires you at first, do it only ten until you can do it oftener without exertion. You may increase it to fifty, as Miss Barnett did.

The leg raising and bicycle pedaling exercises described elsewhere on the page Miss Barnett also practiced daily.

Morning and night Miss Barnett massaged her bust and the hollows at the base of her neck with cocoa butter. The massage of the bust must be done gently, working in a half circle upward and outward movement.

In massaging the face small circles are described from the center of the forehead outward. Then from the sides of the mouth to the outer corners of the eyes the same rotary motion with the tips of the fingers should be followed. The massage should be applied with a firm and steady pressure. Massage from the base of the neck upward toward the chin. When finished with the massage rub a piece of ice over the skin. It tones it up and closes the pores.

Don't overlook the importance of keeping the body free from poisonous matters by a daily elimination. Drink water—at least three pints a day, and more if you can. If this is not sufficient, take a cathartic of some kind. It is most important to attend to this, especially if you are eating foods to which your stomach has not been accustomed.

Next week I shall continue reporting the improvement in Miss Barnett's weight, with further instructions as to diet and exercise for those who wish to gain.

Answers to Beauty Seekers.

MARGARET: THE BOWING EXERCISE reduces legs, back, and abdomen. This is one of the exercises I gave Mrs. Lane in my work of reducing her thirty-six pounds in six weeks. Simply lie flat on the floor, with face and toes down; then slowly raise head and legs, keeping legs stretched to tip of toes. Do this three times and increase gradually. Don't strain. I shall be glad to mail you the other exercises if you send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

* *

MISS EDITH: THE BATHS ARE necessary after the exercises. These are fully described in the series of articles of how I reduced Mrs. Eva Lane thirty-six pounds in six weeks. I shall be glad to mail you full instructions if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope. I suggest your consulting your physician about the goiter and the ringing in your ears before attempting to follow out my instructions for reducing.

* *

IRENE L.: THIS PREPARATION will soften hard water: Put one pound of bran into a muslin bag and place in four quarts of water and boil for fifteen minutes. When washing the face add enough of the bran water to make the water milky. In taking your nightly facial bath first wash your face with warm water and soap, using a good grade of castile soap and a complexion brush. Then dash cold water on your face. Dry thoroughly and massage with a good cold cream or skin food. Only apply as much cream as the skin will absorb. In the morning wash your face in cold water. Don't use soap.

ETHEL K.: SWOLLEN, ACHING feet can be relieved by bathing in vinegar. If the odor is distasteful to you, you might rub them with witch hazel to which spirits of camphor have been added, one or two teaspoons to four ounces of witch hazel. Rubbing the feet with olive oil after the bath is also soothing. I have a formula for corns which I am sure would help to relieve your suffering. Would you like me to mail it to you? All you have to do is to send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

JULIA: A WOMAN 5 FEET 2 INCHES at 39 should weigh 127 pounds. I judge from your letter that the red mark above your eye is a birthmark and suggest your consulting your physician about the possibility of its being removed.

* *

LAURA A.: MY CORN LOTION WILL not help your bunions. Bunions are the result of great pressure and friction on the joint, most frequently the large one of the great toe. The joint should be relieved of all pressure. If possible a loose slipper should be worn to allow the toes to spread, then take a piece of adhesive plaster and bandage the great toe, bringing it into its natural position. This will relieve the inflammation and the bunion will gradually disappear. You can also paint the bunion with a lotion of two drams each of carbolic acid, tincture of iodine and glycerin. Walking pigeon toed often relieves the condition.

GERTRUDE: A GENERAL BUILDING up of the whole system will often remove the dark circles from under your eyes. You can also carefully massage under your eyes with a skin food or oil of sweet almonds. First bathe the skin with hot water, then with the tip of the finger gently smear a little skin food or oil of sweet almonds over it. Allow the skin to absorb the oil or cream for a few minutes, then wipe off the superfluous grease and leave for the night. This prevents any possibility of stretching the skin. Get lots of sleep and rest, drink plenty of water, be careful of your diet, and don't worry.

WORRIED: Ammonia in the bath water will not harm the skin. It is not only cleansing and refreshing, but it softens the water. Do not put more than two tablespoonfuls in the water and do not use any on your face.

If You Wear Sheer Blouses

Good taste demands the removal of hair from under the arms. Observe well-gowned women everywhere.

The one and most "womanly" way is to dissolve the hair—on face, lip, neck, or underarm—by applying once El Rado, the Sanitary Liquid, with a piece of absorbent cotton or sponge. [illegible] without injury to the skin, or increasing and coarsening later growth, as often results from shaving. [illegible] guaranteed. [illegible] in 50c and $1.00 sizes.

Doris Blake Says

If you were born this week you are Forceful.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

Have you a perplexing love affair in which you need the counsel of a friend? Write Doris Blake, care The Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply send stamped and addressed envelope.

IF your birthday falls during the week beginning June 4 you will sometimes be venturesome to the point of recklessness, but usually you look before you leap. In those few rash moments you start undertakings that are apt to end in bitter disappointments and you become melancholy under defeat. You should remember that some hard luck comes to all of us and that there's no one more to be admired than a game loser.

Given a responsible position, which is at the same time congenial and progressive, you will settle down with a steady attention to business that is truly commendable. You are a business character by nature and you expect your talents to pay you back in good money. But if you are unoccupied you soon become dissatisfied and there is no telling what mischief your idle hands will find to do.

You have literary ability, marked by a vein of sarcasm that oftentimes makes people want to keep out of your way. If you would but remember how distasteful just such criticism is to you perhaps it might help eradicate this rather unpleasant trait from your nature.

A creed is of great importance to your happiness, for you naturally have a strong religious nature. You would make a good pastor, or if a woman a valuable minister's wife. But the fact that you take up with fads readily sometimes causes mixups in your religious affairs, for you can change your creed over night. But withal, you are charitable, self-sacrificing, and affectionate, and as a result, seldom attain any great degree of wealth.

On the whole, you would be classed as a profound thinker, with a love of justice; forceful, but rather tardy in your decisions. In the beginning of an undertaking, you may be quiet and sedate, but soon the influence of your force and energy will be felt. Unfortunately your wonderful ideals are often sadly shattered. Usually, in such cases, you have been depending more upon your intuition than upon your judgment.

Of all Gemini people you are most loyal and devoted to your friends. You can be a powerful comforter in time of trouble and often in so doing forget your own woes completely. Not always are you happy in your home ties, but you are not given to inflicting your unhappy moods on others. You want everything made clear to you and you can be counted upon always for your business integrity.

It must be admitted that you are hard to please and determined, too, so you are apt to run up against a stone wall every once in a while. Then, naturally, you hurt yourself. In such cases you should try to be more deliberate; just sit down and wait and the right time will come for you to act. "More patience, more concentration," that should be your motto.

Don't go into business alone; employment is almost always best for you. Though you are naturally literary you do not like the confinement of this kind of work. With your varied talents you will be successful along many different lines—as a clergyman, a tutor, an inventor, a musician, an artist, and a publisher you might try your luck.

Always try to surround yourself with restful, refined people, for with your naturally excitable disposition you should cultivate repose of manner; in fact, you should have one hour a day for absolute quiet.

In marriage your greatest happiness may be expected from a union with Aquarius, Jan. 21-Feb. 19, for the reserve and quiet strength of the Aquarius nature gives you the rest and stability which you so need. Leo, July 23-Aug. 23, would make a congenial companion, as would also Virgo, Aug. 24-Sept. 23.

Your colors are green, red, blue, and white; birthstone, beryl and sapphire; fortunate weeks, those beginning April 26 and Nov. 14.

Two Walk With Her.

"Dear Miss Blake: Will you please tell me the meaning of the following names? Morris, Alyward, Maxine, Phyllis, and Jerry. Also is it right for two of my boy friends to walk home with me from school? M. M. P."

As to walking home from school, why shouldn't your boy friends have this privilege just as well as the girls? Don't let such attention turn your head so that you will get "snippy" toward the girls; just treat the boys as good pals and don't boast of their friendship. The names Morris, Aylward, and Maxine are derivatives, hence I can't help you out; Phyllis refers to a green bough; Jerry is the short for Jeremiah, meaning "exalted of the Lord."

A Matter of Etiquette.

"Dear Miss Blake: We are two girls of the same age, and as we haven't ever gone with fellows much we would like to know what to do when we are in other company. For instance, if you were at a social and introduced to Mr. X, but did not talk with him after that, then later in the evening Mr. Y asks me to go home with his friend, Mr. X, is it proper to accept when you have just met him? What should I say when asked by Mr. Y?"

Certainly, accept, on the grounds of your friendship for Mr. Y. He has stood sponsor for Mr. X. in introducing him to you and in asking you to go home with him. No need for many words about the matter, just say, "Yes. I'll be glad to have your friend accompany me home," or something to that effect.

They Would Propose.

"Dear Miss Blake: We are two young ladies, good looking, and attractive. There are two fellows who are considered our 'steadies.' They are handsome and wealthy and we are sure they are in love with us. They are perfectly adorable and we are simply wild over them. Now, Miss Blake, don't you think it would be all right for us to propose to them, since this is leap year? L. M. & G. E."

Just you dare try it, and I predict that there will be two more broken hearts to place on the scrap heap. If they're handsome, wealthy, adorable, and considered your "steadies," let well enough alone and leave the sacred privilege of proposing to them. Put this silly idea about leap year privileges out of your minds immediately and remember, if you wish a man's love, you must keep his respect.

Real Love Stories

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

Do you know a real love story—one that is stranger than fiction? It is the idea that is wanted. No attention will be paid to literary style. "The Tribune" will pay $5 for every story published. Manuscripts will not be returned. Address Doris Blake, "The Tribune," Chicago.

When the Show "Went Broke."

A FEW years ago I was "barnstorming" with a small company through the middle west. Business had been bad and salaries unpaid for several weeks. At the end of each week we received our board money, that was all. Finally the time that we all dreaded arrived. One Friday night, on entering the theater we saw on the call board the following notice: "This company closes Saturday night."

After paying my board bill Sunday morning I had just $1 left. I packed my suitcase, asked my landlady to take charge of my trunk until I sent for it, and went to the railway station. I bought a ticket to the next station—50 cents—and boarded the train. Purposely selecting a seat apart from the other passengers I watched anxiously for the conductor. I felt frightened when I saw him. He was young, tall, strong, determined looking, with blue eyes that at the time were rather intelligent than kind. I had hoped he would be somebody's father, gray haired and middle aged. When I gave him my ticket I told him my story, quite simply and briefly, and asked if he would take me to Chicago, where I could get work, as there was nothing I could do in the little town of N——, where I had been stranded.

"I have absolutely no one who can help me," I said. "Here I must starve. If I can get to Chicago I can find work." He looked at me searchingly, and his first words were not reassuring. "What's this, a jolly you're giving me?" Happily I had some programs and a manuscript in my suitcase, and I soon convinced him.

"I'll talk to you after the next stop," he said. I could see he wanted to think it over

When he did come his face was positively transformed, no longer stern, only kind and interested.

"I want to help you," he said, "and at the same time I want to do the right thing by the road. I tell you what I'll do. I'll take you to Chicago, and when you get to work buy a ticket from Chicago to N— and send it to me, and I'll cancel it. That will square it with the road. Here is my address."

"I shall be so glad to do that," I said. "I didn't want to ask charity, yet I could think of no other way. I'm glad you thought of this." I respected him for his combination of kindness and business integrity. "What a treasure that road has," I thought.

Almost immediately after my arrival in Chicago I got a position, this time with a company that paid salaries. As soon as I had a little money ahead I learned to my delight that the next week we would be in a town on his run. I bought the desired ticket and then met all the trains, looking for him At last I found him. He was striding along in a businesslike way toward the station when I touched his arm.

"Why, howdy do," he cried, evidently much pleased as well as surprised. He held out his hand, and I put mine, with the ticket in it. He asked me how long I would be in that town and my address and then hurried on to his business.

Of course he wrote to me and I answered, and now I have given up the road and wait for my husband in our little home in Chicago, where he comes at the end of his run.

Design for Porch or Veranda Lamp Shade.

Materials required: One eighteen inch lamp frame as per illustration; seven-eighths yard of fine Japanese silk, preferably some with six designs suitable for panels of shade; seven-eighths yard of white china silk; seven-eighths yard of rose silk for inner lining; three and one-half yards of old gold narrow trimming; one-half yard of gold banding, one and one-quarter inches wide, for top; six fancy bead tassels.

Tear seven one inch strips from white china silk, fold in half and carefully wind all wires on the frame. Wind tight and cover every wire.

Then divide Japanese silk into six parts, each part having a perfect design; lay on pattern of one panel and cut out, leaving allowance for holding and sewing all around each panel.

Cut out six each of panels from rose inner lining and white Chinese silk.

Now select one each of the white, rose, and Japanese silk pieces. Place one upon the other so that the white is nearest the wires and the Japanese design on top. Pin all three at once to panel of frame. Allow no wrinkles or puckers to show. Get the design in the center. Pin all around the panel and begin to sew. After sewing all around panel trim carefully and closely.

Repeat process until all panels are covered. Then sew, trimming along all ribs and around bottom wires. Put wide band around top and lastly sew tassels at corners of frame.

Helen was out playing when a neighbor's child came in to visit her. Helen not being in she went away. When Helen returned I told her that a little girl was in to see her, and in reply Helen asked me the little girl's name and I told her I did not ask her for her name. Helen being anxious to know, asked me if her name was Constance, and I again told her I did not know her name. Then she asked me what color hair and eyes she had and what she wore. When I told her, Helen replied, "Well, did she look as though her name was Constance?" N. H. S.

Any question on etiquette will be answered if you write to Elizabeth Van Rensselaer, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply inclose a stamped, addressed envelope. Please write on one side of the paper only.

When Entertaining House Guests.

It is often a problem with those having out of town house guests what to do when an invitation comes which does not include them. If it be to a large entertainment, like an evening reception or an afternoon tea, write and ask your hostess if you may bring your visitors. If it be, however, a dinner, or a luncheon, or a card party, you should decline, explaining why you do. This enables your hostess, if she has room for your guests, to ask you to bring them. But don't ask a hostess if you may bring your guests or send them in your place. This places her in an awkward place. Let any such suggestion come from her. Invite your town friends to meet your visitors at your house, but don't ask them to entertain your guests.

M. J. R.: In introducing a man to a woman—and the introduction should always be the man to the woman, never vice versa—say: "Mrs.——, may I present Mr. ——?" The same form can be used in introducing a Miss to a Mrs., unless the Mrs. is much younger than the Miss, in which case the formula can be reversed. Though a simple mentioning of the names is usually sufficient, unless it is a special introduction, one planned and brought about. You can also say: "Mrs. ——, I want you to know Mrs.——."

MRS. E. O. E.: You, as the older resident, should take the first opportunity you have to call on the newcomers, leaving one of your cards and two of your husband's. No previous introduction is necessary. If she is careful as to etiquette, she will return your first call within a week or ten days.

UNKNOWN: It is almost impossible to give any phrase to express condolence that does not sound stilted when not prompted by sincere, deep feeling. Trust your own impulse in such a case. If no words come to you spontaneously, don't say anything. A look, a pressure of the hand, often convey more than speech. The same holds good in responding to any expression of sympathy. A murmured "Thank you" is enough. To a newly engaged person express your congratulations and good wishes as simply and sincerely as you would like to have the same sentiments expressed to you. Say: "Congratulations to you both!" To the man you might say: "You're a lucky man." To the woman say: "He's a lucky fellow"—that is, say this if you think it. Otherwise don't.

An Artist With the Brush.

I was keeping "steady" with a young man and each time he called I was dressed to receive him. He told me he was going to surprise me by coming in when I did not expect him, just to see how I looked in curlers and not "all dolled up." At the time I thought he was only jesting, but he did really surprise me by popping in one Saturday afternoon while I was busy scrubbing. I did not hear his approach, so he had the pleasure of watching me handle the brush and soap until I detected his presence. We are married now and hubby says it was the way I handled that job that made him ask me to be his life mate, for he says his mother had told him that a woman who could handle a brush and a bar of soap would make a good wife. Didn't Wear Everything.

He was rapidly becoming a successful business man and had women friends who could afford to spend money and dress well. He was introduced to me at a social function given by people of prominence in our town. Almost every woman there was overdressed. They seemed to think they must outdo themselves because the host and hostess had great wealth. I dressed as I thought was suitable for the affair, which was a Sunday and in the afternoon. My husband told me afterwards that he was attracted to me because I looked as though I had "left something at home." That is, that I did not wear too elaborate a costume and all the jewelry I could scrape together. L. K.

BOHN
Syphon Refrigerators
ON SALE AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES

In order to dispose of the 1915 stock of Bohn and Sanitor Refrigerators, our factory at St. Paul has authorized us to place on sale all models which do not conform to our 1916 patterns.

The only material difference between the 1915 and 1916 models is in the construction of the provision chamber linings—the earlier models having the lock joint or sheet porcelain lining, and the 1916 style the one piece seamless porcelain provision chamber.

By taking advantage of this sale you will be able to effect a saving of about 35% in the purchase price—and you will possess a refrigerator that is famous the world over, a refrigerator used exclusively by the Pullman Company and all Railroads.

You can't afford to miss this golden opportunity. But don't delay purchasing till your particular size is gone.

SEND NO MONEY
SIMPLY ASK FOR A SET

The proposition below, which is open to every reliable housekeeper or her husband in the United States, is, we believe, the most extraordinary business announcement that has ever appeared in this paper. We are not sure that we have made clear our purpose in sending out ten thousand of these TWENTY-YEAR GUARANTEED ALUMINUM SETS under this remarkable offer; but we do know that any housekeeper who fails to take advantage of this offer is virtually slamming a door in the face of Opportunity.

This set consists of twenty-one pieces, as follows:

A QUAKER VALLEY COFFEE PERCOLATOR, of seven-cup capacity, made of heavy aluminum metal; has a mirror-like finish, with ebony finished handle. Will make better coffee—yes, better than any your mother ever made.

A SIX-QUART PRESERVING KETTLE—No more useful cooking vessel ever made. Preserving fruits is only one of its many uses. There is daily, almost hourly, use for a vessel of this size in the kitchen.

A THREE-QUART PRESERVING KETTLE—Equally as handy as the larger size every day in the year.

A NINE-PIECE COMBINATION OUTFIT—Includes a covered roaster, a double boiler, a steam cooker, five egg poachers, and three pudding pans.

TWO SANITARY SEAMLESS BREAD PANS, with round corners. Dimensions, nine and one-half inches long, five and one-half inches wide, two and three-quarter inches deep,—just the right size.

TWO PIE PLATES—to insure your pie crusts being just right, you must have a pie plate that will distribute the heat quickly and evenly. Only those made of pure aluminum do this.

HALF-PINT MEASURING CUP—Has all the good features of a glass measuring cup, and one more,—it will not break.

SANITARY LADLE—Bowl made of one piece of pure aluminum, four and one-eighth inches in diameter; handle is twelve and one-half inches long.

SALT AND PEPPER SET—Handy, attractive and everlasting.

This distribution of ten thousand of these aluminum sets is our way of convincing ten thousand home-makers that it is no longer necessary to pay retail prices for Home Furnishings. We work for a living here in the Valley; there are no expenses here but those which add value to the merchandise we sell. When we ship Home Furnishings direct from the factory to your home, with no retail store expenses added, it must be plain to every reasoning person that our prices are lower or our quality is higher.

We want to prove this to you. Hence, we have selected this set of Guaranteed Aluminum Ware to place in your home without a cent in advance. On your simple request, we will ship one of these sets by express or parcel post direct to your home. We make this offer despite the fact that the prices of aluminum goods are advancing by leaps and bounds. Preparations for this great distribution were made long ago; and you may be sure of getting your set if you sign and return the coupon promptly. You will then have an Aluminum Set for your kitchen that is guaranteed to wear for twenty years; and the great Quaker Valley organization stands back of this guarantee.

After you receive this set we want you to examine it carefully. Note the thickness of the metal; compare it with any aluminum utensils you may already have in use; inform yourself as to present prices of high-grade aluminum ware. Then, if you are completely satisfied that you could not buy a set of the same composition at retail, equal or even inferior in quality, for less than fifty per cent more than our price, remit $7.95 at the rate of a dollar a month; if, on the other hand, you are not entirely satisfied on every one of these points, you may return the set within thirty days at our expense. Now, sign the coupon and rush it to the mail-box. We assure you that on this proposition there is no time to lose.

Quaker Valley Mfg. Co., 118 Mill Street, Aurora, Illinois

You may ship direct from the factory to my home for thirty days' free trial, the twenty-one piece Aluminum Set. I am to pay nothing but transportation charges on arrival. If entirely pleased, I will remit $1 a month until your special get-acquainted price of $7.95 is paid; otherwise will return within thirty days at your expense.

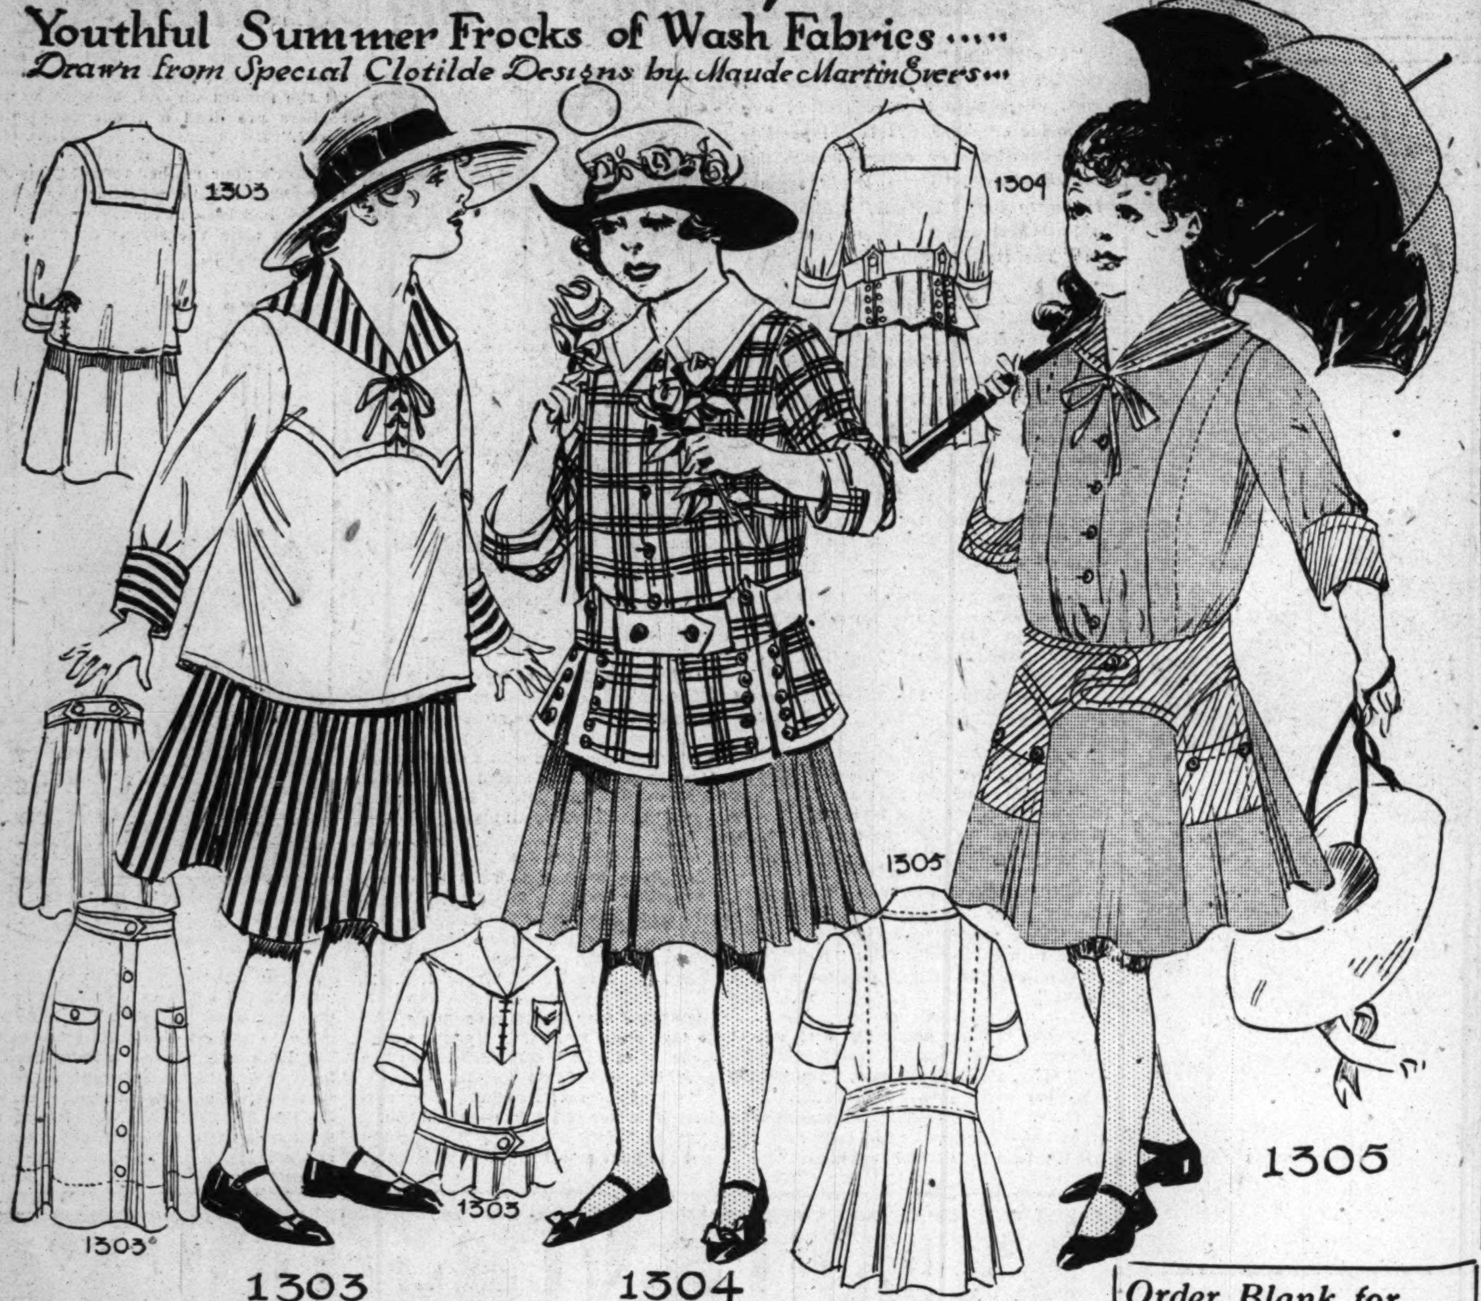
PATTERNS by CLOTILDE

Youthful Summer Frocks of Wash Fabrics

Drawn from Special Clotilde Designs by Maude Martin Evers



No. 1302—Middy blouse, 8 to 14 years. For the 12 year size will be needed 3⅜ yards of material 36 inches wide or 2⅝ yards 44 inches wide, with ½ yard 36 inches wide for the collar and cuffs.

No. 1303—Girl's skirt, 8 to 14 years, to be made in two or three pieces. For the 12 year size will be needed 2¾ yards of material 36 inches wide or 1¾ yards 44 inches wide.

No. 1304—Girl's dress, 8 to 14 years. For the 12 year size will be needed 2¼ yards of material 36 inches wide or 1¾ yards 44 inches wide for the blouse, 2 yards 36 or 44 inches wide for the skirt and trimming, or 4¼ yards 36 inches wide, or 3¾ yards 44 inches wide if one material is used.

No. 1305—Girl's dress, 8 to 14 years. For the 12 year size will be needed 3¾ yards of material 36 inches wide or 3¼ yards 44 inches wide, with 1¼ yards 36 inches wide for the trimming.

I HAVE received so many requests for wash dresses for the girl between the ages of 8 and 14 that I am devoting a whole Sunday's issue to just these patterns. They are all designed with the pretty and the practical well in mind and will be found to reflect all the most attractive of the new fashion tendencies.

Linen is extremely serviceable and likable for the uses of the girl whose age comes within the range of the above pattern. Pongee is also an appreciated material, and in dimity and batiste there is a wide range as far as color and quality of goods are concerned. Then, too, for more ordinary wear there are gingham and chambray and some of the coarser, more substantial muslins. Plaid ginghams were never prettier than they are this season.

All of these patterns come with the basting line and the added seam allowance; and all of them may be depended on for accuracy and reliability.

Housekeeping Mistakes.

Did you make absurd mistakes when you first started housekeeping? Of course you did. Every bride has. So tell us about it. And if you are a man—well, surely you can remember what your wife did. The funnier the experiences the better. For every letter published "The Tribune" will pay $1. Keep your story on one side of the paper and within 300 words and address it to Housekeeping Experience Editor, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." No manuscripts returned.

That Cornstarch Pudding.

While I was yet a bride my husband's sister and two brothers came home from boarding school for the holidays. Proud of my culinary skill, I invited them and other members of the family to dinner. Now I was a city girl on a farm, and when I sent to town for cornstarch I accepted without question the groceries my husband brought home. Had I not given him a plainly written list of the needed purchases for my dinner?

My new relatives were perfectly satisfied with my cooking, but did not say much in praise of my chocolate cornstarch pudding laden with mounds upon mounds of whipped cream.

A few days later the young woman from an adjoining farm came to dinner. Remembering the success of the pudding I resolved to try another. By way of conversation I remarked as I made preparation for another "company" dinner, "Blanche, did you ever see cornstarch in bulk this way?" "No," she said, gazing at the white lumps in the package, "why that is bulk starch for starching clothes."

Although no one became ill from partaking freely of pudding I have never been allowed to forget about it. E. W. P.

Baking the Gentle Bean.

We both liked baked beans so well, I thought one day I would cook some for dinner and surprise my husband. I got my oven real hot and poured some beans real dry ones, in a pan and sprinkled salt on them, and set them in the over to bake. Pretty soon I heard such a popping coming from inside the stove. I ran and opened the oven door to see how my beans were, and they were popping something awful. They hit me in the face and flew all over the kitchen and sounded like bullets hitting the walls. I was so surprised and discouraged, I sat down beside the beans and cried over them.

L. E. J.

A Little Order of Salt.

When one of my friends was a bride and was ordering her first groceries by phone, she asked for half a dollar's worth of granulated sugar, as she had often heard her mother do. Then under the impression that mother always bought staples in large quantities, she ordered half a dollar's worth of salt. "You mean coarse salt, not table salt, don't you?" asked the grocer. "No, table salt, if you please," replied the bride with dignity. So her husband, at noon, found her stowing away ten bags of salt, and only then did she realize the absurdity of her mistake. MRS. R. C. R.

A Pretty Blue Colander.

When I first started housekeeping I found I needed a colander in putting up fruit. I had never used one before, so I wet uptown, and on seeing what I thought was a pretty blue one, purchased it. On arriving home my husband had a good laugh about my "colander," which was a sink strainer. MRS. C. A. M.

Better When Boiled.

I was a bride and had little experience in cooking or housekeeping. My husband said he was fond of pickled pig's feet, so I bought some and placed them without cooking in vinegar. That evening for dinner I placed them triumphantly before him. He tried to eat one, then smiled and said, "You had better boil them a few hours, my dear." H. A.

Improvising an Icebox.

During the first few weeks of our matrimonial voyage we kept house on a very limited basis. Having purchased one of those large pot roasts for two one Saturday evening and arrived home, I promptly forgot it. In the morning when I arose to go out for a paper I noticed my trunk rope tied to the bottom of the bed and the other end hanging out the open window. On the end of the heavy rope dangled our immense two pound pot roast, keeping cool for Sunday dinner. SAP.

Ordered Boneless Liver.

Although I have been married many years, my husband never tires of telling our guests of my first marketing for breakfast.

We were to have liver and bacon, a favorite dish with my husband. "Be sure to tell the butcher to have the bone removed from the liver, as it is the only way I can eat it," he called after me. I repeated this with emphasis at the market, and before a number of customers, and didn't know why they seemed amused.

I told my husband the butcher smiled and said he would look out for that bone. "He just thought you were so important and knew you were a bride and wanted to get your trade," my husband laughed. I hadn't realized a liver had no bone. Was I a bonehead? M. E. E.

Tired, Aching Feet and Limbs are promptly relieved by applying Absorbine, Jr., the antiseptic liniment. It is soothing, healing, and invigorating—puts vim and energy into jaded muscles. One of the many enthusiastic users writes: "I received the trial bottle of Absorbine, Jr., all right and at that time was unable to walk without a cane, just around the house. I used it freely and inside of two days could walk without limping, something I had not done in two months. I went to the drug store and procured a $1.00 bottle and today can walk as good as ever. I'll never be without it. I am recommending it to everyone I can, for I am a living witness."

At druggists, $1.00 and $2.00 a bottle or sent postpaid. Liberal trial bottle for 10c in stamps.

This Does More Than Remove Hair

The razor, pastes, rub-on preparations and liquid imitations of De Miracle act in the same manner. They merely remove hair from the surface of the skin. De Miracle, the original liquid depilatory, is the only logical and scientific way to remove hair. It alone contains certain ingredients which are antagonistic to hair and which are quickly absorbed. Therefore it attacks hair under the skin as well as on the skin. Well groomed women always use De Miracle for removing hair from the limbs to prevent it from showing through stockings. Also for removing hair from under arms. Avoid disappointment; buy De Miracle by name and you will get the only depilatory that has a binding guarantee in each package which entitles you to your money if it fails. In $1.00 and $2.00 bottles. If your dealer will not supply you buy a bottle at The Public Drug Co., Buck & Rayner's six stores, or direct, postpaid, in plain wrapper. De Miracle Chemical Co., Dept. A-8, Park Ave. and 129th St., New York.

PICTORIAL REVIEW
says

"It has been many years since I have had occasion to speak with such praise of any article." Genuine magazines of the highest character endorse only De Miracle. Beware of so-called endorsements of bogus magazines which are used to exploit the sale of questionable depilatories.

Choosing a Vocation.

A YOUNG girl about to finish her high school course writes to find out just what line of work she ought to take up to earn her own living, and how much her services in the business world would be worth.

She gives no information about herself except for the statement that she "possesses executive ability"; and as there are in these days numberless ways in which an able girl or woman can earn a livelihood, and as I know her only through this letter, and am not an adept in clairvoyance, I cannot tell her for what work she is best fitted.

As one must necessarily be qualified in a particular manner for almost any line of work, it is up to the individual to judge for herself what kind of employment would be suitable for her. If she is unable to decide this for herself, her chances for making a success of a business venture are slim. When she refuses to use her own judgment about something which concerns herself so closely by her vocation, how can she expect that judgment to be of value to any one else?

A complete list of the professions in which women have been successful would be too long to print here, however a few of those to which a great many women have adapted themselves is given below. Any one of them might appeal to the high school senior:

Nursing—that is, trained nursing—has for a long time been recognized as a vocation to which women are especially suited. The training course is usually three years, and during that time the probationer is given room and board. Law and medicine; these professions require four years, at least, of special study. Writing, such as reportorial, fiction, and advertising. In the more commercial lines one might find her forte in buying or selling; keeping a set of books; stenography; designing and making hats, gowns, etc.; interior decorating; hairdressing and its appendages. In fact, there are many occupations in which a woman may engage and make use of an especial talent.

When about to start out to earn her own living, a young girl should not enter thoughtlessly into work that is uncongenial and for which she possesses little or no ability, or allow herself to be persuaded against her better judgment to take up a profession for which she has an aversion. She knows better than even her most intimate friends in what direction her capabilities lie, and if she desires to be happy in her work and make a success of it, let her use her own judgment as to what that work is to be.

HOW TO ORDER YOUR CLOTILDE PATTERNS.

In ordering a waist the size should be determined by the bust measure. Give the bust measure. In ordering a skirt the size of the hip is more important than the size of the waist, but give both the hip and the waist measure. Ten cents for each waist, coat, or skirt.

In ordering misses' patterns the age should be stated—12, 14, 16, or 18 years. Ten cents for each waist, coat, skirt, or dress.

In ordering children's regular patterns order them by the age of the child. Ten cents each.

Clotilde's patterns are made in New York exclusively for "The Chicago Sunday Tribune" and may be obtained through no other service. It is requested that customers allow one week before making complaint for nonreceipt. An extra 2 cent stamp will allow for letter postage and thereby hasten delivery.

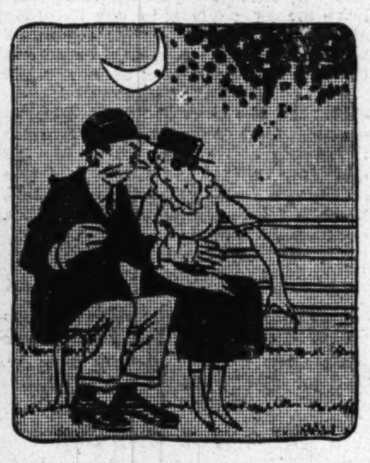
Too Crowded for Carl.

In our courtship days Carl and I used to walk in the park, and if the weather were fair we sometimes sat upon the benches and talked. He would often say: "Dearest, it is like heaven to have you near me." We continued the walks after we were married and one night we were talking on our customary bench when he spouted: "Maggie, must you have all the room?" J. G.



A Wail From a Wife.

Before marriage my husband thought I was a good manager, economical, and entertaining, but now he sings another song. His salary has increased, but my allowance has not. He leaves cards around for me to read: "Saving is better than gaining," and "Economy does not mean parsimony—it means the elimination of the nonessential." I remain at home every evening and most days, do my own housework, and care for my children, while he is out evenings and week end trips—I don't know where. O, the inconsistency of man. Q. R.

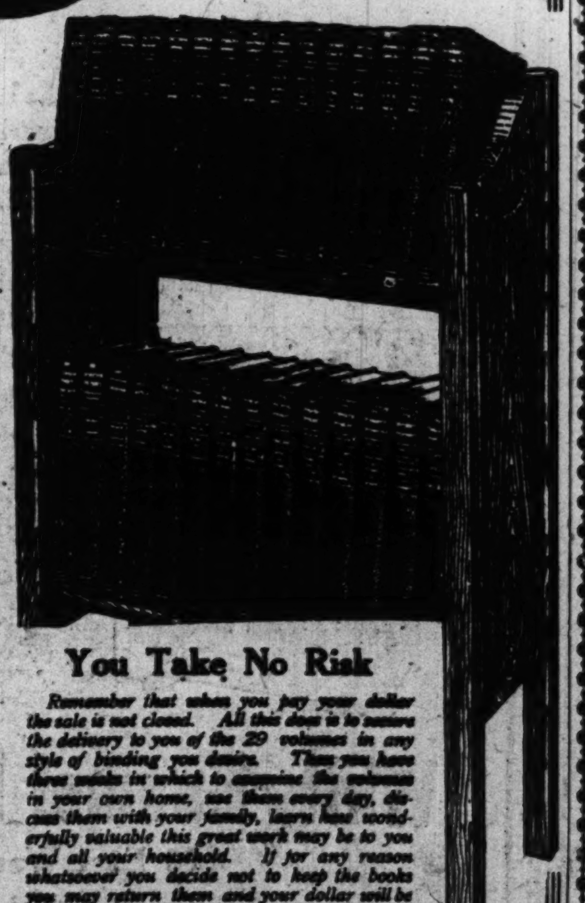
Sets are on view, in all bindings, in our bookstore. But only for 12 days more, after to-day.



You Take No Risk

Remember that when you pay your dollar the sale is not closed. All this does is to assure the delivery to you of the 29 volumes in any style of binding you desire. Then you have three weeks in which to examine the volumes in your own home, use them every day, discuss them with your family, learn how wonderfully valuable this great work may be to you and all your household. If for any reason whatsoever you decide not to keep the books you may return them and your dollar will be refunded and all shipping charges as well.

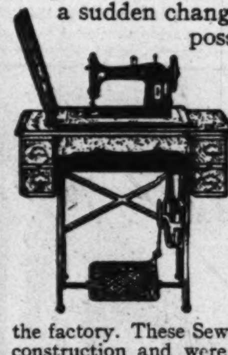
THE "ELITE" ROTARY

Only 200 of them—they are sure to go quickly.

The factory had 1,000 of these splendid, up-to-date drophead models already for shipment to Europe, when a sudden change in shipping conditions made it impossible for the machines to be forwarded.



We Could Get Only 200

although we wanted the 1,000. However, we got these 200 at specially low prices, and we are giving you practically all this saving, and you may take advantage of our terms.

SMALL DOWN PAYMENT—THEN $1 EACH WEEK

Every machine is brand new, right from the factory. These Sewing machines are the latest and most modern construction and were made in one of the biggest sewing machine factories in the world. A full set of best steel attachments with every machine, and every machine is FULLY GUARANTEED.

This Offer Good Only While the Supply Lasts.

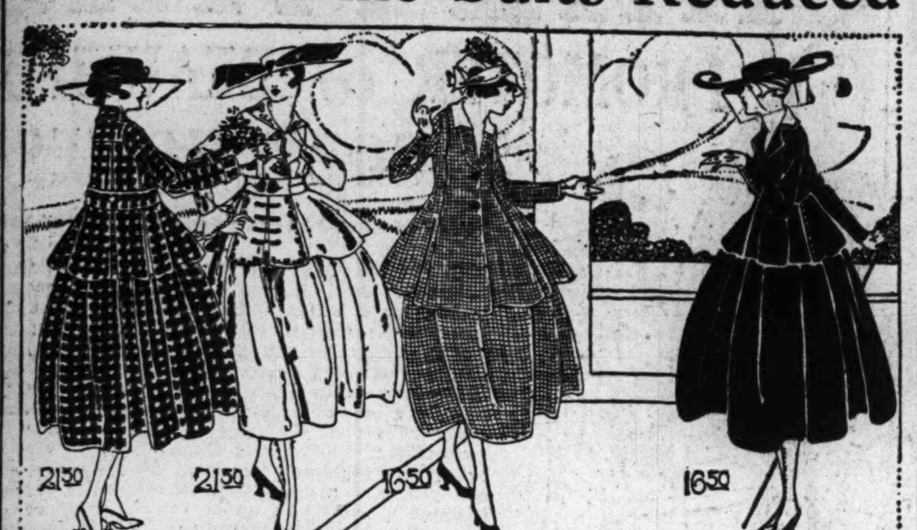
$2 values in Khaki and white duck trousers, all sizes, colors are guaranteed fast, special for Monday, 1.50

Prices of Fine Suits Reduced



WHEN we tell you that we are reducing the prices of some of our very finest suits, you may count it as an unusual piece of bargain news. In many of the very finest lines we have been selecting the miscellaneous lots of those numbers that have been selling the best; and we are offering the suits so collected in two great groups at two remarkably low prices. If a spring suit is needed, don't miss this golden opportunity. Third Floor.

These Suits at 16.50

A VERY attractive collection of smart, cleverly designed suits in which correctness of style is carried out even in the smallest detail. Individuality of fashion, good materials and workmanship are characteristic of these high-class models. Gabardines, poplins, serges, all the popular checks, together with many other desirable fabrics make up an assortment which, we believe, cannot be equaled, at 16.50

These Suits at 21.50

THESE are the best numbers of this season. It's a selection in which you'll find exactly what is most becoming to you. Materials are serges, gabardines, poplin, velour and shepherd checks in black, white and other popular colors. Tailored, belted and dressy models are shown. Included is a fine selection of taffeta suits in all wanted colors and most fashionable models; specially priced for this sale, at 21.50

To All Convention Visitors, as Well as Every Citizen of Chicago, We Extend a Cordial Invitation to View the Great National Painting

"BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG"

This wonderful battle canvas, said by many authorities to be the most realistic in existence, is now on exhibition on our Fourth Floor. Mr. James Drummond Ball, of Boston, will give explanatory lectures, free to all visitors, at 10:30 and 11:30 A. M., and 12:30, 2:15, 3:15, and 4:15 P. M.

Over 1000 officers of both armies have approved the historical accuracy of this painting. The entire battlefield, five miles long and five miles wide, appears in complete detail, affording an historical object lesson that both young and old will find exceedingly interesting and instructive.

Chicken as Food and as Flavor.

AT this season of the year people are looking for novelties or niceties in chicken cookery. Lately I have received queries, comments, and criticisms concerning the work of a certain lecturer, who has made a four pound chicken go farther, that is, appear in several menus for four or five people, than has seemed to the querists reasonable.

It is not unreasonable, if the chicken is considered from the standpoint of a flavor, which can be so extended as to make a goodly number of pleasant dishes, rather than from the standpoint of food value. This is for several reasons the more reasonable standpoint for the thrifty, because at best the food value of chicken is not great. The actual amount of solid food obtained for your money is small, but when added to the amount of agreeableness the sum may be large if you have the skill.

For instance, pound for pound a broiling chicken has just a little more than one-fourth the fuel value of bread as food. However, we should not eat chicken for fuel. It is too frightfully expensive, if we did but know it, to be used as an energy maker, more expensive than one person in five hundred imagines.

We can get our protein or building and repairing material from chicken, and, although this is an expensive method, it is far less so than to get fuel that way. It is an expensive way of getting this foodstuff, but not so expensive as using it for fuel or heat and energy making. It is expensive, say, in a broiling chicken, because the total refuse is almost 42 per cent, so that, though you seem to pay 30 to 50 cents a pound for the edible part, you really pay almost double that price. And then suppose you pay $1 a pound for the edible part and refuse together, as many eaters in public places do, while they get only about 50 per cent of the whole weight as edible, you see that costs them $2 a pound. And this does not tell the whole story, because a broiler is 75 per cent water—that is, while you are eating what seems the solid part, only one-fourth of it is solid nourishment.

There is only one sort of economy in buying broiling chickens. You are not paying for a lot of fat which perhaps you do not know how to use. A broiling chicken has but 2.5 per cent fat, while fowls have more than six times this amount, and a fat hen more yet.

If we buy our chicken for flavor instead of fuel the broiler gives us the most delicate and fine flavor, if properly cooked, and the boiling chicken gives us the most in the sense that it can be most extended. The fricasseed chicken, being a sort of boiled chicken, gives practically the same. Fricasseed chicken, I have been told recently, is not popular in one place where many people eat. Perhaps it would be if called chicken pot pie, as it was formerly called in many cases.

Depending on the chicken for this one thing, flavor, allowing the food value to be a secondary matter, we have the greater need to cook our chicken carefully, for you can divide both food value and flavor by two by bad cooking. In other countries the question of flavor begins back to the growing of the chicken.

A great many careful eaters buy their chickens alive, as the Jewish people do when they cannot get them kosher killed. It is said that in New York City 90 per cent of the live poultry is consumed by orthodox Jews, a small per cent goes to the big hotels, direct to Chinatown, and to a portion of the Negro and Italian population. This is probably not true in cities farther west.

If any one wants to consider the effect of kindness on hens, let him read pages 108 and 109 in the new book, "How to Live," indorsed by almost all the big health people in the country. It is a good plan to buy chickens alive, and treat them kindly for a few days to discover what their health is after the barbarous treatment they have received in transportation. I know things, many things, that keep me from eating chicken promiscuously. I have saved news items year in and year out about chicken ptomaines which have laid low whole companies.

Sherman in "Food Products" quotes our leading authority on the matter of preparing chicken for the table while they are yet alive. He says: "The practice recommended by Pennington is to bring the fowl into good condition by feeding clean grain mixed with buttermilk for from seven to fourteen days, then starve them for twenty-four hours in order that the intestinal tract may be as nearly empty as possible, and kill by cutting the jugular vein; then that part of the brain which controls the muscles holding the feathers in place is destroyed by a thrust of the knife and the feathers are so loosened that they are easily pulled out."

This is a method recommended when chickens are to be kept for any time. When they are to be used right away I should think it not advisable to allow a hen to get hungry enough to worry. From my experience with hens in my youth I should say that they have worrying proclivities.

But there is no end to this subject of chicken food, of which too few people know the true flavor. Canned chicken, for instance, tastes to me like a corned meat, and I believe it often is half veal. Chicken meat can be extended with both veal and pork without sacrificing flavor, for it is what I learned to do in Paris in preparing a galantine—recipe for it pages long—but it takes good cooking to do it. Chicken and veal may be combined in a chicken loaf of the old fashioned type, but veal is an unstable meat and too laxative for large numbers of people. Jellied chicken in summer if it touches tin may become dangerous and is never a safety first preparation.

Boiled Chicken.

In boiling chicken the question is do you want the chicken meat to serve you best or are you most in need of the broth for from one to half a dozen different uses, soup, sauces, jelly? You get a strong broth in two ways, either by using cold water or less boiling water at the start. By using the less boiling water you also leave more flavor in your chicken. A strong broth can always be extended with milk or with vegetable stock for a soup, and it will jelly often without adding gelatin, though the best stock for this purpose is one made by boiling chicken bones or the raw carcass stripped of meat, as the hotel cooks strip it.

But whether started in cold water the chicken must be cooked slowly. Half of the rocky and seemingly uncooked chicken we get has been over the fire for a long enough time, but has had too violent a fire under it. It should simmer at the top rate, not boil at top rate. The albumen of chicken cooks stiff, as does the white of egg with too much fire, and you cannot unstiffen it, although you may cook the chicken to rags thereafter.

If I want to put my boiled chicken in the oven, stuffed with mashed potato and bake it for half an hour, I truss it carefully and remove the tendons as I would from a turkey's drumsticks, and then I barely cover it with water when I put it to cook. Do not add salt until end.

Chicken Broth.

Standard chicken broth requires one pound of raw material for each pint of finished liquor, but to get this, the way some people cook, they should start with a quart of water per pound, and when flavor is to be made to go a long way this amount may be used even by a careful cook. The chicken should be disjointed, never with a cleaver. It takes a most careful cook to flavor this with raw materials and to thicken with rice—not more than a tablespoon to a pint—and the one who cannot do this without cooking her broth down most uneconomically should prepare them separately.

Pot Roasted Chicken.

Clean and disjoint chicken—dissect it, not chop. Prepare the kettle by frying out in it a little pork, or use a tablespoon of drippings, or, best, a little chicken fat. You may use up to half a cup of fat, and the more seasoning vegetables you use the more fat. First fry the pieces of chicken in the fat until they are well seared; then add to them a cup of boiling water; bring to boil, cover kettle, reduce fire to simmering point, and cook until tender. An old hen will require two hours, perhaps; a younger bird less. Occasional basting improves the meat. With the most careful cooking no water would be required and the flavor best preserved. The pieces may be broiled in flour before searing, but flour burns on if fire is a bit too strong. The vegetable seasonings should be chopped or cut in dice; just a bit of onion or carrot, onion and sweet herbs. If chicken stock is used instead of water use double amount, as it is thick. If a cook will not pay attention to secure just the right fire she will have to use a trivet, or her chicken will burn on.

Insect Enemies of House Plants.

SCARCELY a day goes by that does not bring to the writer some inquiry about insects on house plants, and how they can be controlled or killed. One tells of having used this preparation, another of something else, and all agree that in order to grow plants fairly well one is obliged to wage constant warfare against the various insects that establish themselves on them; also, that most of the remedies advised fail to do thorough work, and often prove worthless.

The insect that seems to be most in evidence, everywhere, is the aphis, or green plant louse. No collection of plants can long escape an attack from it. Where it comes from no one knows. Your plants may seem entirely free from it today. Tomorrow you will find it on nearly all of them, and a few days later, if nothing has been done to interfere with it, many of the branches will be literally covered with the progeny of the first comers.

In a short time your plants will take on a pale, sickly look, which goes to show that they are being drained of their life blood.

Tobacco, in some form, is the one and only agent by which this all pervading enemy can be conquered. Years ago we fumigated our plants by burning tobacco leaves on live coals. This frequently killed all the aphides and came near killing the owner of the plants at the same time, as the fumes of the burning tobacco are extremely nauseating, and women with sensitive stomachs could not endure them. In addition to their effect on the person, they left the odor of stale tobacco smoke on everything with which they came in contact, and it was necessary to give the entire house a general airing every time fumigation was resorted to.

Because of this most women who gave the method a trial concluded that if they had to choose between plants and this insecticide they would give up their plants.

When plants have become badly infested with aphis I would advise making a strong infusion of tobacco—preferably from the leaf—and applying it in the form of a bath. Let the infusion be the color of table tea of ordinary strength.

Fill a good sized tub with it, and dip the plants in it, being sure that they are wholly submerged. Allow them to remain under water for ten or fifteen minutes. By the end of that time every aphis will be dead if the infusion is as strong as it ought to be.

I prefer the dip bath to showering because it gives no insect a chance to escape. If sprinkling or showering is depended on many insects will escape because of the failure of the infusion to reach them. The consequence will be that in an incredibly short time the plants will again be covered with insects. The bath does thorough work.

After once clearing the plants of this enemy I would advise frequent use of the tobacco extract now on the market under the name of nicoticide. This contains the nicotine in such strength that a small quantity of it in a pail of water will, if applied to your plants in the form of a spray, prevent the return of the insect, because it leaves a tang on the foliage and stalk that discourages him from attempting to get his living from them in the old way. Use this insecticide often as a preventive against the raids of the enemy.

The red spider is another most destructive enemy of plant life. It flourishes in a hot, dry atmosphere, such as too frequently prevails in the ordinary living room. It is such a tiny creature that its presence is seldom suspected until yellowing and falling foliage shows that something is wrong. If you examine some of the leaves that have fallen you will almost always discover tiny webs on the under side of them, and in these webs you will see red specks like grains of cayenne pepper.

These "specks" are the spiders that will kill your plants if you don't kill them, and the only way in which that can be done is by using water on your plants so freely that they are moist all the time. The spider abhors moisture, and will not stay where it exists.

The proper thing to do when the plants are badly infested is to fill a tub with water heated to 120 degrees and dip the plants in it, allowing them to remain for about half a minute. This will thoroughly cook the spider, but it will not injure ordinary plants in the least.

This is the only method that does effective work in promptly ridding one's plants of the pest. Showering freely and often may drive it away after a time, because continued moisture will convince it that conditions have conspired to make matters unpleasant for it and the sooner it looks for more agreeable quarters the better, but the hot water bath will so expedite matters that I would advise it in every instance.

After once ridding the plants of the spider make it a practice to spray them all over, daily, and keep water constantly evaporating in the room to impart some degree of moisture to the atmosphere. These measures to prevent the return of the pest will help your plants, which always suffer from a hot, dry air, even if the spider is absent, as it seldom is, under the above conditions. The plants need water on their foliage almost as much as at their roots.

MARION HARLAND'S HELPING HAND

By MARION HARLAND

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

"WHILE talking to a friend a short time ago he suddenly asked me what I would do if I lost my position and couldn't find another right away, or what I am going to do in ten or a dozen years from now. I am single, over 20 years old, and am entirely alone in the city. Now, what do people do under the circumstances, other people, I mean, who are depending on a small salary for support and simply cannot get ahead of present expenses? One cannot work in an office forever, I suppose. I would like to hear from some one in the circumstances or from some one who has been there and knows what to do.

If there is any one among our Cornerites who would like to correspond with this young woman and give her the result of any experience which may prove helpful, I will be happy to supply the name and address of F. S. H. on request, accompanied by a stamp. Surely there must be many who are confronted with such a problem as hers and have had to work it out. Not every girl marries and those who do are not always better off. It strikes me that there is an opening here for a comparison of views and of experiences which ought to be distinctly edifying and helpful.

To Make Home Attractive.

"I have been reading your Corner and I notice that many ask for things to add comfort to their homes. I wish so much I could get something to make my humble home attractive. It occurred to me that if I wrote my wish I might have a favorable answer. I would be so glad if some of your good readers who have an old dresser scarf and a center table cover that is no longer needed would pass them on to me. I would be glad to return the favor in any way possible.

"MRS. A. M."

This is a modest request, and I wish it might be granted.

Music to Exchange.

"I have three lots of sheet music that I don't care to play, but I know they would please other music lovers who have to pay high prices for music. The pieces are by well known composers. Lot No. 1 contains six pieces for the first and second grades. They are good for beginners. I will trade them for 'Mother Machree.' Lot No. 2 contains pieces from grades 3 to 6. These I will trade for any three pieces by W. R. Williams. Any pretty reveries may be substituted if necessary. Lot No. 3 contains ten pieces by classical composers, and I will trade them for 'When Irish Eyes are Smiling,' 'That's an Irish Lullaby,' and 'Just as the Sun Went Down' or 'In the Evening by Moonlight.' All these pieces are free from disease germs and few have been soiled in the slightest degree. I will not accept music that has been in a house where occupants had any disease. I will send these postpaid to any one or in the three lots. First come, first served. These pieces contain no vulgar or ragtime music. L. W."

This is a tempting offer to the lover of good music.

In Need of Glasses.

"I saw in the paper recently that a woman had four pairs of glasses to give to some one who needed them. I surely would appreciate a pair of the glasses or the frames, either, as I have not the means at hand to supply myself and have been a shut-in for six months and confined to my room for four months. I do so much enjoy reading to pass away the time. I hope I may be in season to receive one if not two pair, for my husband is in need of glasses also and sickness has placed us where we cannot get them at present. I would also appreciate reading of any kind and quilt pieces. I have been benefited greatly by your good recipes and in a little while will send you some myself. MRS. J. B. E."

Unfortunately this correspondent does not give the initials of the friend who offered the glasses and it is, therefore, impossible for me to get on the track of them. Will some one else send her a pair? Write for her address and send them direct to her, not to the office. I hope she may get the glasses and the reading matter and quilt pieces as well.

Hatching Canary Eggs.

"I read in the papers a while ago the query on how long it takes a canary bird's eggs to hatch, and think it my duty to help others in bird raising, as I have raised birds for the last three years. It takes from thirteen to sixteen days for the eggs to hatch; they vary a trifle in the length of time. I hope this bird raiser will have as good luck with her birds as I have had with mine. If she will write to me personally or address me through the Corner I will give her any information I possess on the matter, and do it gladly.

"MRS. A. M. T."

This is the sort of offer we seldom have, and I am sure those who are interested in canaries will be glad to get in touch with Mrs. A. M. T. If desirous of her address I hope they will write to me for it, inclosing a stamped and self-addressed envelope.

Wants Reading Matter.

"I am almost a shut-in from rheumatism, and can't do active work at all, but I can do fancy work, and like it. I am a poor widow and live alone, and would like books and reading matter.

"MRS. L. S. B."

Will any one reply to this appeal and write to me for this invalid's address?

Lost All Her Plants.

"I should like to get some potted plants, especially ferns. I lost all the plants I had last winter. In exchange for ferns and other plants I would do tatting and crochet. I also have reading matter to give away to any one paying postage. M. G. P."

Is there any one who would like to comply with this friend's offer and send her potted plants or ferns in exchange for the articles she offers? If so, write to me for her address, inclosing stamped and self-addressed envelope.

Formula for a Rose Jar.

"I am a constant reader of the Corner and am now spending a few months with my parents here. I would like so much to have a recipe for a rose jar. I have such a lovely opportunity to get all the roses I want here. A. K. H."

Directions for preparing potpourri for rose jars have been given repeatedly on this page, and I add to this also the request that the directions may be preserved carefully, as they are given below: Gather roses in full bloom after the dew is off of them and pack them in a jar in layers two inches deep, sprinkling each layer with two tablespoons of fine dry salt. Fresh roses and salt may be added daily until the jar is full. It must be kept in a cool, dark, dry place. A week after the last layer is put in turn out the contents of the jar on a tray and toss them together until all the parts are loosened. Put with them the ingredients given below, turn into a clean jar, cover, and set it away for a fortnight, when it will be ready to go into rose jars. The fragrance will last for years if the jar is kept covered. Formula for perfumes: One ounce of orris root, half an ounce each of violet powder, rose powder, and heliotrope powder, half teaspoon each of mace and oil of cloves, quarter teaspoon of cinnamon, twenty drops each of oil of melissne and oil of eucalyptus, ten drops each of oil of chiris and bergamot, two drams of alcohol. This is an old family recipe and I can fully recommend it as satisfactory and lasting.

In Exchange for Work.

"Let me thank you much for several orders for needlework which I have obtained from readers. I wish to exchange work with some one for a child's go-cart or a covered lunch basket or box.

"MRS. E. M."

Does some one wish to make the exchange asked by this correspondent? If so, please send for her address, inclosing stamp. I am glad the friendliness of the Cornerites has secured for her orders for work.

Must Earn Her Living.

"Can any of the Cornerites help me to solve a problem? I am a widow, aged 43 years, and am exceedingly anxious to learn something that I can depend upon to make a living. I want to earn enough to manage to have a home where I could have some things dear to me about me, even though it was but a rented house, and could, as soon as I got it ready, send for my young son to come to me. Isn't there something I could learn to do that I could depend upon for a living? I don't want to study and work under any one who would be cruel, cross, and overbearing in disposition. I would rather be dead than endure that, and often the ones who make the loudest professions of Christianity are those who have such dispositions as that. I love the pure and noble things of life and long to advance in them. My life has been long and hard, but now there is no one to do anything for me and I dare not wait any longer, for I have to make a living some way and want to have some kind of a home where I can have about me the things dear to me, or at least not have to live in another woman's home and work under her mind. I want a little independence. Isn't there something I could learn?

The difficulty about replying to this letter is that the writer gives no idea of anything she can do. Under the circumstances, all I can do is to print her communication and trust that some one may have an inspiration which will help. I shall be glad to send her address to any one inclosing a stamped and self-addressed envelope with her request. I am afraid she will find in every walk of life something unpleasant to put up with in those with whom she is associated. The "professions of Christianity" do not always cover the laws of gentleness and of consideration, but this is not the fault of the faith, only of those who fail to practice it as they should.

Wants Hothouse Fowers.

"I have some white flags (the plants) to offer in exchange for one oleander and other hothouse flowers or cuttings. I will be glad to give any readers who will send me a stamped envelope a simple method of bread making. Most of the methods are too elaborate for beginners and mine is for young and inexperienced housekeepers. MRS. M. P. S."

Flowers and plants are always in demand and I trust the exchange suggested may be arranged. If we may judge by the number of persons who wish to secure a simple and trustworthy method of making bread, it is likely that this benevolent correspondent will be overwhelmed with requests for her recipe.

To Make Lamp Shades.

"Some weeks ago there appeared in the Corner instructions as to how to make lamp shades. I mislaid mine in some manner and would like you to favor me with a copy. L. N."

I do not know when the instructions referred to appeared and so cannot find them for the correspondent. All I can do is to print her letter and trust it will meet a satisfactory response.

Will Write Letters.

"I am 18 years old and would like to correspond with a shut-in near my own age and also with an old lady who would like to receive letters from a young girl.

"L. M."

I grieve to say we have shut-ins of only 18, and I hope one of them may see this letter and ask for the address of the writer. There must also be more than one old lady who would rejoice to hear from a young girl.

"Corns All Gone! "Let's ALL Kick!"

Every Corn Vanishes by Using Wonderful, Simple "Gets-It." Never Fails. Applied in 2 Seconds.

Isn't it wonderful what a difference just a little "Gets-It" makes—on corns and calluses? It's always night somewhere in the world, with many folks humped up, with corn-screwed faces, gouging, picking, drilling out their corns, making packages of their toes with plasters, bandages, tape and contraptions—and the "holler" in their corns goes on forever! Don't you do it. Use "Gets-It," it's marvelous, simple, never fails. Apply it in 2 seconds. Nothing to stick to the stocking, hurt or irritate the toe. Pain stops. Corn comes "clean off," quick. It's one of the gems of the world. Try it—you'll kick—from joy. For corns, calluses, warts, bunions.

"Whee! I Don't Care! I Get Rid of My Corns With 'Gets-It'!"

"Gets-It" is sold everywhere 25c a bottle, or sent direct by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago, Ill. Sold in Chicago and recommended as the world's best corn remedy by Economical Drug Co., The Fair, Siegel Cooper & Co., Home Drug Co., Ashland Drug Co., W. A. The Home Harmonious

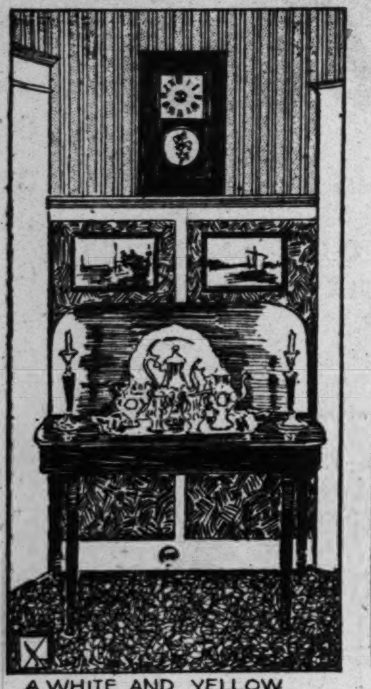
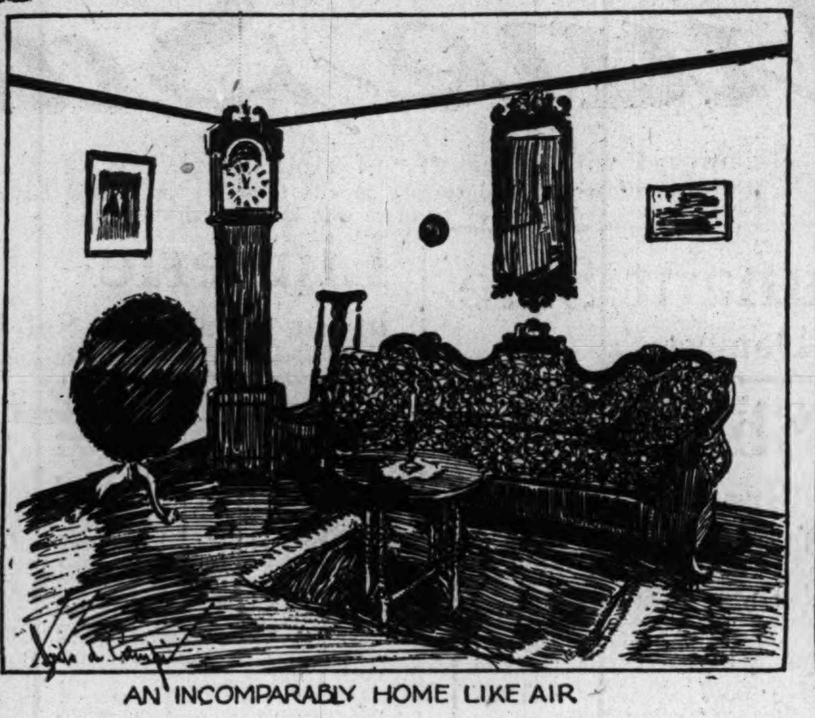
Sentiment in Furnishing

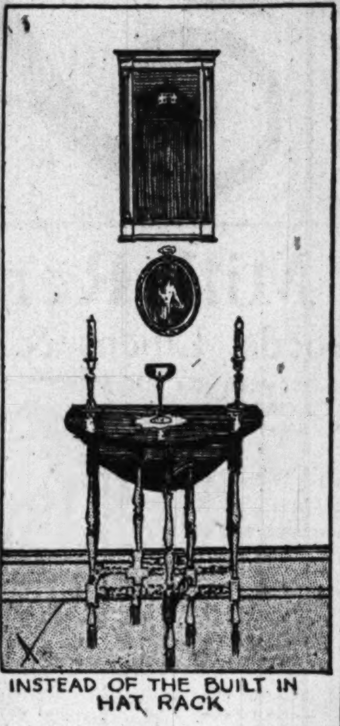
Anita de Campi



A WHITE AND YELLOW DINING ROOM



AN INCOMPARABLY HOME LIKE AIR



INSTEAD OF THE BUILT IN HAT RACK

Miss de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to interior decorations. Address your letter to Miss Anita de Campi, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.

IN many things the efforts of men and of women singly are incomplete—one needs the complement of the other. Particularly is this true in home making. The loveliest homes are those in the planning of which a man and a woman have coöperated. There is about such homes a completeness that a man alone or a woman alone could hardly have attained.

I was impressed with the value of sentiment in furnishing lately in going through an apartment that I was astonished to find cost only $45 a month rental. Without the delightful furnishings contained in it the place would have passed for a cheap little flat, but, thanks to the warm interest of the family of three who had settled there, it took on an air of home that was incomparable.

A feeling of contentment pervaded the place, and what a rare quality that is! In many of the richest residences the first feeling I usually get is one of striving—striving to be richer, striving to be more striking, striving to convince the world of a huge bank account by a visible display of expensive articles. But here was no strife—just a peaceful, quiet calm, gentle as the smile of a shy young virgin. Nothing was new fashioned; nothing could have been characterized as the "very latest thing," yet in spite of its plainness it was satisfying.

You may achieve fashionable results by the use of modern furnishings, or unique ones by violent contrasts of color, a topsy-turvidom of black ceilings and white floors, etc., or give an effect of wisdom in period furnishing, with accuracy in detail and a guidelike letter perfect explaining of decorative motif and their symbolic meanings, but for the comfortable, livable, with all the year around, indefinite, sort of home sweet homish feeling, nothing quite equals the thoroughly American style of furniture known as colonial.

And so this little home was furnished, and nothing could have been prettier neater, and more suitable to the needs of a family who frankly avowed that their means were too limited to allow of experiment. They were not willing to risk indulging in popular modes that might go out of style at a moment's notice, but decided in favor of the good, substantial sort, tried and found not wanting in our great-grandmother's time, and that will be just as beautiful, because its beauty is true, when still in use by our children's children, and their children.

The quest of the colonial is more than mildly exciting. It gets into the blood. This young coupple began their married life in a boarding house. A beautiful gateleg table was given to the wife. It found a place in her room. Then one day at an auction she found a couple of mahogany chairs of attractive pattern, cheap, and bought them; then she ran across a book on antique furniture, and, lo and behold! in one of the illustrations she recognized her chairs and found they were Chippendales.

She studied her book and learned many things, and found that her own taste was undoubtedly intuitively good—had she not chosen these lovely things only because their actual beauty appealed to her? Her judgment was pleasantly corroborated, but, better still, her intelligence was gratified with the analysis disclosing just wherein the actual beauty of these things lay.

Of course, it became irresistible to add to this little collection. Piece by piece the boarding house furniture was relegated to the storeroom, until their own room was completely furnished. In it was a bed with slender posts, with pineapple tops and a spinet desk. There was a card table and Eli Terry clock, a drop leaf corner table, four chairs (a fiddle back, a ladder back, a round-about, in mahogany, and a comb back Windsor in old oak). Beside the bed was a highboy with a separate little dressing mirror on it. In her spare moments she had crocheted several rugs of new rags, substantially worked over cotton rope—things easily made and that will wear forever.

Then one day it dawned on her that she had furniture enough for two rooms. Then she went in search of rooms, but instead of two unfurnished rooms secured a three room flat, living room and dining room in one, and a bedroom and kitchen. It was not long before, by dint of saving and collecting, these rooms were filled, and then the present $45 five room flat was taken. Here is the luxury of a guest's room, bath and bed room, living room, dining room, and kitchen.

It is all simplicity personified, but absolutely charming. The first thing the new occupant did to make her surroundings harmonize with her belongings was to tear out the ugly hat rack in the front hall. This was stored and replaced by a tiny gateleg table with a rush bottom chair beside it. It was decked with a pair of 10 cent glass candlesticks, and above it was hung an old gold mirror showing a painting on glass of the old statehouse at Annapolis.

The two bedrooms were curtained in flowered chintz. One was so small that there was room for but four pieces in it—a four poster bed, a bench, a chair, and a sewing machine. The latter necessary but objectionably ugly modern contrivance was cunningly disguised. A board the size of the machine top was placed on the machine. This board was covered with chintz and had a flounce of chintz tacked to it that reached to the floor. On this shelf was placed the little dressing mirror swung on a frame with a tiny drawer, and so the whole was converted into a dressing table, the top being lifted off when the machine was needed. The wall paper was pearl gray with a flowered border matching the drapery chintz.

The dining room had the oak woodwork enameled white. The lower two-thirds were divided by wooden strips into panels finished off at the top with a molding. The panels were painted yellow, and the paper at the upper third was a wide and narrow yellow and white stripe. A card table at one side held a colonial tea set in pewter and more candle sticks.

In the living room was an ugly mantel, but this was partly concealed by a quaint fire screen, cunningly worked in cross stitch on canvas, in fady old colors. In one corner was a stately old clock. At the side an old Victorian sofa, a little pie crust tip table, and an old mirror with the Prince of Wales feather in gold. Against the opposite wall was an old bookcase and a little William and Mary low boy, with an understretcher and three drawers with cunning pear drop handles.

Never, said I, have I seen so many treasures in one little place. And about each one I had been told some bit of family history. How fortunate to have inherited such quaint and beautiful things! When I remarked the pewter tea set she had told me that it had belonged to her great-grandmother, Prudence Pringle, and had been given by her to her daughter, Virginia Pringle Van Rensselaer, her own mother, from whom she in turn had received it, and she showed me her own initials newly marked beneath the names of her two predecessors.

"Every one," I said, "hasn't such heritages."

Then my hostess laughed. "I'll tell you a secret," she said mischievously. "There was no Prudence Pringle nor Elizabeth Van Rensselaer—dreams—day dreams, all of them—ornamental prevarications! Didn't you ever notice that romance fairly hovers over things antique? Indeed, you must believe me when I say"—she paused and added paradoxically, "'Romance doth make liars of us all.' The truth of the matter is that there is not a genuinely antique piece among all these things, but they seem to require the atmosphere of fiction, and so I amuse myself by gifting them with ancestors. They are all copies, but I saw to it that the pieces that I bought were honest copies of authentic things about which the interesting tales I told to you were originally told. They are all—every last one, with the exception of the chairs bought at auction, manufactured within the year."

But it must be taken into consideration that some of our present day factories have excellent designers and conscientious cabinet makers in their employ, and the things they turn out, being excellent copies of well selected models, have all of the charm of the antique, as well as the merit of modern workmanship, which guarantees their being even more durable than the genuine articles from which they have been so painstakingly modeled.

Answers to Inquirers.

A. B. M.: Various runners are used on library tables. They may be made of some of the pretty upholstery fabrics now in use, in colors to harmonize with the other colors in the room. Linen scarfs are often used on buffets. Candlesticks are appropriate in living rooms, bedrooms, and dining rooms. What have you that you could put on your buffet? Be careful not to overload it. A good centerpiece such as a black glass fruit basket of some sort, with a pair of vases or candlesticks would be enough to suit the conservative taste.

L. H.: Could you not use green and white bunting? Of course it would be more expensive than the crêpe paper, but it lends itself to lovely folds. I think your plan of using the ferns and palms could hardly be improved upon.

* *

C. D.: Would you not like casement curtains of casement cloth on all of your windows? Put first against the window, quite close to the glass, glass curtains of thin net, swiss, or voile. Clear across the top of each group on the inside on a separate rod, place a narrow lambrequin of casement cloth to conceal the metal rods at the top.

* *

A. R. S.: It is a difficult matter to revarnish furniture original grain and secure a high polish, and it takes considerable time for an inexperienced person. Any good varnish remover will remove the varnish if put on freely and allowed to stand fifteen or twenty minutes before scraping off with an ordinary putty knife. Seeing that the dressers are in pretty good condition, we would suggest removing the varnish, then stain one coat of shellac varnish; two coats of furniture rubbing varnish; after it is dry rub down with flour of pumice and oil with a felt pad, then put on a finishing coat of high grade cabinet varnish, which also should be rubbed with oil. Most housewives prefer to paint old furniture, especially dressers, white, as white finished woodwork and furniture is appropriate in a bedroom.

* *

H. B. B.: Choose a buff colored paper with little sprigs of conventional flowers all through it. Curtain it in sunfast matching any one of the flowers you like over plain voile or Swiss glass curtains. Use a 9x12 rug and supplement this with two other rugs, one at each end of it. Gray is a suitable color.

Does Woman Ever Propose?

Did you ever know a woman who proposed? "The Sunday Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published. Your name will not be published. Address Doris Blake, "The Tribune," Chicago.

Mother Dared Him.

I leave it to you if it was my fault. I had been calling on the girl occasionally for about two months. It was the third night that I had called in one week, but that didn't give her mother any license to come out where we were sitting in the hammock and playfully giggle: "John, don't you dare take away our little girl." I always feel thankful when I recall my narrow escape. R. T. H.

Hurrying the Wedding Day.

We had been keeping company about a year and the man in the case talked often of when he should own a home and when this was done and that had happened we would be married.

One evening he was expatiating on what he would buy when he had sold a certain piece of property, but the market was no good right now, etc., and I finally lost patience and said: "Every evening your ideals are higher and take more money to fulfill. If we wait till you think you are ready we will both be old. You do not realize how much of my time you waste. If you aren't ready this week you won't be any time very likely, so don't come any more till you decide one way or the other."

He left hurt and with decidedly ruffled temper, that being Sunday. Thursday morning he called up early and asked when he could call. At 10 he came and showed me the license and begged me to get ready to go that evening and have it ratified. My sister was terribly put out at my temerity, but eventually gave in and went with us to a judge's house.

We have enjoyed living together much more than if we had waited till we were both too "sot in our ways" to be companionable. E. L.

By Postal Card.

He had been my beau for nearly three years, but was a quiet and reserved man. I was getting tired of roaming around every other night to parties and dances, etc. I loved to have a home, but the proposal must come before marriage, so I thought vainly of how I could get my beloved to propose.

One night on his usual call he gave me the best opportunity I had ever wished for. He had several post cards that he was amusing my little brother with. Tiring of sitting on his lap, he came over to my side and showed me the cards. One had printed on it the words "Let's Get Married." I wrote on it, "All right," and laid the card down, not thinking anything of the incident until brother handed my lover the cards. He saw what I had written on the card.

He gave brother a dime and sent him out after some candy. He then came to my side and the rest was easy. G. H.

Blackheads
are a confession

of the use of the wrong method of cleansing for that type of skin that is subject to this disfiguring trouble.

The following Woodbury treatment will keep such a skin free from blackheads.

Apply hot cloths to the face until the skin is reddened. Then with a rough washcloth work up a heavy lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub it into the pores thoroughly—always with an upward and outward motion. Rinse with clear hot water, then with cold—the colder the better. If possible, rub your face for a few minutes with a lump of ice. Dry the skin carefully.

Do not expect to get the desired result by using this treatment for a time and then neglecting it. But make it a daily habit and it will give you the clear, attractive skin that the steady use of Woodbury's always brings.

To remove blackheads already formed, substitute a flesh brush for the washcloth in the treatment above. Then protect the fingers with a handkerchief and press out the blackheads. Thereafter, use the above Woodbury treatment in your daily toilet.

Do this today! A 25c cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap is sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment. Go to your druggist or toilet counter today and get a cake. Begin at once to get the benefits of this treatment for your skin.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is for sale by every dealer and druggist in Chicago, and, in fact, by dealers everywhere throughout the United States and Canada. Made by the Andrew Jergens Co., New York and Cincinnati.

My Most Embarrassing Moment.

Her Dog Helped.

I was singing a spotlight song in one of the large theaters in Omaha. Tecumseh, my little brown shaggy dog, was missing before the show, but when I was half through the first verse of "Love-Love" he came in from the front of the theater, dashed down the center aisle, and up the steps on to the stage, found a place in the spotlight, then wildly chased his tail during the remainder of my song. H. N.

The Inquisitive Clerk.

I have red hair; it cannot even be called auburn; it is red. I had been in the habit of buying my perfume at a certain drug store and had noticed that the clerk always gazed at my hair. One night I bought some perfume, and, after handing it to me, the clerk said in a whisper loud enough to be heard by every one in the store, "I beg your pardon, but what do you use to make your hair that color?" I now buy my perfume at a different drug store. C. B. J.

Into the Baby Carriage.

It happened last Thursday evening as I was coming out of a picture show. My attention was attracted to a picture of a famous movie star hanging on the wall, and as I turned my back in the direction I was moving a woman came up the aisle pushing a baby cart and looking perhaps at the same thing. Anyhow she did not look where she was going, and when we met I could not understand what happened so suddenly as I fell right into the baby cart and a number of people who happen to be waiting in line for the next show to commence started to laugh all together, and this cause me to feel very embarrassed at that moment, as it seemed to me a very difficult task in pulling myself out to freedom. E. R.

The Rest Escaped Her.

I had been asked to recite at a public meeting and I had chosen a stirring piece that I felt sure would move any audience. I began well, saw that my hearers were interested, but when I had said very dramatically, "I shall never forget, no, I shall never forget," the rest of the selection completely escaped me and I was forced to leave the platform. M. C. R.

"The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published on the subject "The Most Embarrassing Moment of My Life Was When——." Address Embarrassing Moments Editor, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Write on only one side of the paper. No manuscripts will be returned.

The Offspring Speaks.

I was returning from the city on a suburban train with my 3 year old son soon after Halloween when I was surprised to hear him say, "O mamma! See the jack o' lantern," and find him pointing at a man a short distance away in the car with a fat red face and peculiar nose.

"Hush, that is a man," I said; but he was not to be suppressed and with a chuckle he said, "It is not. It is a pumpkin face."

My embarrassment may be better imagined than expressed. L. V. A.

Mandel Brothers' 81st silk remnant sale

—a semi-annual event supreme in State street merchandising

The widely celebrated event to begin here tomorrow morning is accorded importance without counterpart thru continually rising quotations on dependable silks of every sort; for, despite this advance, the remnants of this store's uncommonly extensive spring silk assortments—including the season's preferred novelties—is to be closed out at fractions of original selling prices. Three generations of Chicagoans, to whom the Mandel semi-annual silk sales have been a source of profit since their inception, will greet this 81st affair here tomorrow with signal enthusiasm.

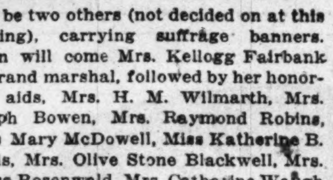
Curious coin unearthed near Cairo

Comment by Mme. X.



Much Entertaining for Out of Town Convention Guests.

By Mme. X.

NOT since those gay old world's fair days, twenty-three years ago, has Chicago presented such a festive air as now, or has her hospitality been so alert and energetic. Hotels, boarding houses, and private residences are all crowded to overflowing. Entertainments large and small are already in full swing.

No other national convention has ever created quite as much social stir as this one—and Chicago has seen many a presidential candidate nominated here. The only preceding similar event to be compared with this one in the matter of grave import was the Republican convention which met here in 1860 in the old "wigwam" on the corner of Lake and Franklin streets, and on May 18 nominated Abraham Lincoln as the young, four year old party's presidential candidate. The eastern delegates and party managers came here determined to control the convention regardless of the wishes of any other section of the country. Their candidate was William H. Seward.

While the Seward crowds marched noisily about what is now known as the "loop" on nomination day, the Wigwam filled up with westerners, so that the easterners, except the delegates, found standing room only for a few of their numbers. That was before the days when there was any connection between seats and party contributions.

Made the Wigwam Shiver.

When Senator Evarts nominated Seward, except from the New York delegates, there was slight response. When Norman B. Judd presented Lincoln's name there arose such a shout as was described by one present as "an unbridled shriek such as I never heard before nor since. It was almost unearthly. It made the wigwam shiver. It made the cold sweat come out on the brows of the members of the New York delegation."

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE performed a feat up to that date unprecedented. It reported the convention in full—speeches, reports, aspects, and events—and set a new standard in newspaper work.

Prominent in Chicago society in that era were the Isaac N. Arnolds, the Mark Skinners, the Ogdens, the Sheldons, the John Wentworths, the William Brosses, the Julian Rumseys, the Thomas Drummonds, the Roswell Masons, the George Manierres, the Augustus Burleys, the Edwin C. Larneds, the Thomas B. Bryans, the E. B. McCaggs, and the Norman B. Judds.

New Figure on the Scene.

The wheel has turned, and now a new factor has come in to add to the brilliant complexities of convention week in Chicago. Woman, who fifty-six years ago was a decidedly negligible factor, a creature of hoopskirts, delicate susceptibilities, and side curls, is today a striking figure on the scene. She is no longer either to be ignored or derided. She is a factor and a power in the land. When 4,000,000 women have the right to vote for president, as is the case today, even politicians must reckon with them, and it is this that gives significance to the flocking to Chicago of nearly as many women as men.

The National Woman Suffrage association and the Congressional unionists are both here, fighting on different lines for the same end—the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the national constitution. The unionists are holding a convention and speaking on street corners. The nationals are also holding a conference and are getting up a parade to escort a petition to the Republican convention asking for a suffrage plank in the party's platform.

Maching in the "Wedge."

Under the leadership of Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank many of Chicago's young and most fashionable women are walking in this parade. In the much talked of "wedge" will be the Mesdames James Ward Thorne, Morris Johnston, John Borden, Honoré Palmer, Austin Niblack, James Goodwillie, R. H. McCormick Jr., Laird Bell, Ralph Hamill, William G. Hibbard Jr., George Higginson, Peter Dunne, Cecil Clark Davis, Arthur Bissell, Percy Hammond, Howard Linn, Albert Kales, and the Misses Adela Barrett, Mary Walker, Louise Herrick, Mary Newberry, and Cornelia Conger. The wedge will be headed by Mrs. Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor.

The whole line will be led by Miss Suzette Ryerson, tall, dark, and handsome, bearing an American flag. Behind will be two others (not decided on at this writing), carrying suffrage banners. Then will come Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank as grand marshal, followed by her honorary aids, Mrs. H. M. Wilmarth, Mrs. Joseph Bowen, Mrs. Raymond Robins, Miss Mary McDowell, Miss Katherine B. Davis, Mrs. Olive Stone Blackwell, Mrs. Julius Rosenwald, Mrs. Catharine Waugh McCulloch, Mrs. Lambert A. Wile, Dr. Lucy Waite, and Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout.

After this will come Mrs. Fairbank's personal aids: Miss Edith Wyatt, Miss Grace Abbott, Mrs. John A. Carpenter, Miss Edith Swift, Mrs. James Keeley, Mrs. Charles Kayser, Mrs. J. M. Patterson, Mrs. Charles Hamill, Mrs. Joseph Fish, Mrs. Robert Kohlhammer, Mrs. Maude Kain Taylor, Mrs. Joseph Winterbotham, Mrs. Roy McWilliams, Mrs. Morrill Dunn, and Miss Agnes Foreman.

Suffrage Officials in Line.

After this, and headed by the American flag, will walk the National Suffrage association's honorary and active presidents, Dr. Anna Howard Shaw and Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt. Then will come the board of directors of the association, followed by a "living flag," twelve girls in fancy costume. Then another banner and after that the "wedge."

Following this thirty pioneer suffragists in automobiles (for which the organizers of the parade are asking for machines to be volunteered). Visiting state delegations come next in line, and Mrs. Fairbank says that any Chicago woman from another part of the country may walk with her native state.

Mrs. Harriet Munro Brown, president of the Illinois equal suffragists, will head the state board and the members of that association. Then come many other detachments, including Chicago university women in cap and gown, Art institute students in smocks and carrying palettes, Bohemian, Swedish, Norwegian, Polish, and Italian women in their native dress, and innumerable detachments of women in various callings in life. Among battalion commanders in the first division are the Mesdames William J. Calhoun, Jacob Bauer, Julian Mason, and George Bass.

Mrs. Arthur Meeker, chairman of the reception committee of the convention ball and garden party to be given next Tuesday evening by the Chicago Equal Suffrage association at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Fowler McCormick, has invited a most imposing group of representative women to receive with her, among whom are Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, general chairman of the ball; Mrs. James Morrisson, president of the Chicago Equal Suffrage association; Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. Cyrus Hall McCormick, Mrs. Frank O. Lowden, Mrs. James Keeley, Mrs. Frederic W. Upham, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Mrs. Robert G. McGann, Mrs. Medill McCormick, and Mrs. Stanley McCormick.

The suffragists expect to turn out from 20,000 to 25,000 marchers. Hidden in the ranks will be many prominent society women who want to swell the numbers, but are desirous of doing so as inconspicuously as possible.

Another manifestation of feminine energy is the convention ball, which will take place on the eve of the convention in the Harold McCormick house and grounds on the Lake Shore drive. Mrs. McCormick's generosity and public spirit are manifested by her cabled directions to those in charge of her house to put it in order as if she were coming home and to give it entirely over, from roof to cellar, to the organizers of the ball.

Mrs. John Carpenter, Mrs. Roy McWilliams, and Miss Katherine Dudley are going to make the affair a Hindu fête. Heaven send the tropical Hindu night for it!

The large assembly tent will have a gold canopy above and red walls, and many colored rugs on the floor. Mrs. Carpenter has found some real date palms to aid in the oriental effect. Further to increase this impression, the tent poles will be crowned with feathery palm leaves.

In this pavilion the Russian dancers, Pavley and Ukrainsky, in wonderful Persian costumes, will give some quite new dances, and the Hindoo singer, Ratan Devi, will sing some native songs, accompanying herself on a tambourah. For this performance the regular lights will be turned off and a weird blue radiance will be shed on the singer. The performance is said to have the uncanny, hypnotic effect so often found in eastern scenes and eastern music with its benumbing iteration, reiteration, and minor cadences.

Mrs. Jacob Baur and her supper committee are arranging for a supper to be served indoors, while the music and dance committee has engaged a mixed string and saxophone orchestra for the out of door dance platform.

Among those receiving will be Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, Mrs. Arthur Meeker, Mrs. Cyrus H. McCormick, Mrs. James W. Morrison, Mrs. Robert McGann, and Mrs. Stanley McCormick. The especial guests of honor will be Dr. Anna Howard Shaw and Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, who will stand in the receiving line.

Dance on Board the Commodore.

One of the gayest parties of a gay week will be the dance given by Arthur Meeker, James Deering, and Robert Hall McCormick Jr. on Friday evening on board the S. S. Commodore. Here will be gathered together all the out of town notabilities, among whom will be the Nicholas Longworths, the Cornelius Vanderbilts, the James Wadsworths Jr., the Brazilian ambassador and Mme. de Gama, the Larz Andersons, the August Belmonts, Senator and Mrs. Wetmore, the governor of New York and Mrs. Whitman, the John Hays Hammonds, Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer, Miss Anne Morgan, the Frederick Macmonnies, Mrs. Louis Tiffany, the Adolph Bories, Mrs. Percy Morgan, Mrs. William Astor Chandler, the William H. Crockers, the H. J. Whighams, the Peter Dunnes, the Chandler T. Andersons, Eugene V. R. Fairs, the Peter Higginsons, and Maj. Henry Higginson—in short, such a galaxy as Chicago has not seen for twenty-three years.

The old Randolph street viaduct will creak and groan under the weight of hundreds of smart motors that evening, and the out of town visitors will wonder where they are going, as they speed over that long causeway, while Illinois Central trains are roaring and puffing below them. When they get out to their journey's end they will wonder still more where they are as they board the Commodore between lines of sailors standing at salute and traverse the narrow companion ways.

Adorned with flags and bunting, the old craft is the jolliest place imaginable for a dance, and this will be sure to be an occasion with more than the usual amenities.

Woman's Board for Henrotin.

But all is not hurly burly even now. Many people are still pursuing the even tenor of their ways, and among them is the group of women who, with Mrs. Edwin Ryerson at their head, are forming tomorrow the woman's board of the Henrotin Memorial hospital. Up to now this institution, unlike its compeers, the Presbyterian, Passavant, St. Luke's, Lying-In and Children's Memorial, has thought it could dispense with this branch of service. It has recently discovered the error of its ways and has asked Mrs. Ryerson to organize such a board.

She has summoned to her aid Mesdames R. H. McCormick Jr., Robert Gardner, William P. Hunt, Morrill Dunn, J. M. Patterson, Bruce Borland, R. E. Danielson, W. McCormick Blair, Cecil Barnes, Augustus Peabody, and the Misses Edith Blair, M. J. Rozet, and Florence Harris. The organizing meeting takes place tomorrow morning at Mrs. Ryerson's residence, 999 Lake Shore drive.

The Henrotin hospital was built by the doctors who run the Policlinic, one of Chicago's most practical and scientific institutions. The latter is managed on German lines of efficiency. It has three aims—to cure its patients, give a post graduate course to doctors, and train nurses. Its patients are all free patients and the doctors in charge give their services. It is supported by the tuition fees of visiting medicos and by the profits of the Henrotin hospital, which is an entirely paying institution.

Drs. Senn and Fenger founded the Policlinic and Dr. Henry Favill was its first professor of medicine. From the beginning of his professional career Dr. Edwin Ryerson has been associated with the Policlinic, which accounts for his wife's deep interest in this and the Henrotin hospital.

When the twenty-five members of the American Red Cross first aid class, which she organized last winter, presented her with a sum of money to use as she saw fit, she applied it to helping furnish a nurses' rest room at the Henrotin hospital.

It was her study of this hospital and its needs that gave the directors of this institution an idea that a woman's board might be a desirable adjunct to it. Hence the woman's board.

WEDDINGS.

The wedding of Miss Katherine Keith daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edson Keith and David Adler Jr., Thursday afternoon was the first of the June events and brought a large and fashionable assemblage to St. Paul's Universalist church at Prairie avenue and Thirtieth street, where the ceremony took place at 3:30 o'clock, with the Rev. L. W. Brigham, pastor of the church, officiating. The bride was attended by Miss Emita Jewett as maid of honor, and her other attendants were Miss Frances Adler, sister of

Mr. and Mrs. David Isaacs of 23 Presidio avenue, San Francisco, formerly of Chicago, announce the marriage of their daughter, Florence, to Roy Prescott Cohn of San Francisco, to take place this evening at 8:30 o'clock.

NEWS OF THE CHICAGO WOMEN'S CLUBS

G. O. P. Women to Entertain at Reception and Tea.

By Hazel Whitaker.

WHAT with conventions and suffrage both on their hands these days, it's a bit difficult for women to remember that political parties still exist. However, the near approach of the Republican convention brings the local woman's branch of this party into the limelight, for with a membership of more than 500 prominent women, they have become a powerful asset to their party.

The largest function to be given by the Republican Woman's association in honor of the convention delegates is the reception and tea Thursday afternoon at the old Higinbotham residence, Michigan avenue and Twenty-ninth street. Over 1,000 invitations have been sent out:

The patronesses are:

Mrs. Carrie C. Catt,
Mrs. J. B. Reynolds,
Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont,
Mrs. H. M. Brown,
Mrs. Grace W. Trout,
Mrs. Jesse Holdom,
Mrs. J. T. Shedd,

Mrs. C. F. Fishback,
Mrs. E. J. Brundage,
Mrs. G. A. Ramsay.

Mrs. Harriett Hertz Seyl is the soloist for the occasion; Miss Ethel Levy and James Griffin will appear in interpretative dances; Annette Baumann, the child contralto, accompanied by Miss Jessie Piggott, will give some of her charming numbers, and Tomaso's orchestra will play.

The president, Mrs. William Severin, is social chairman of this function; Mrs. Robert R. Levy, chairman of the ways and means committee, and Mrs. Dora Earle, a former Progressive, chairman of the finance committee.

Every afternoon during convention week Mrs. Gay E. Bangs will be at the Hamilton club to give information to members of the association and to out of town visitors.

The history of the Republican Woman's association is centered largely around the work of one woman, Mrs. William Severin, who, while president of the Wicker Park Woman's club, organized the district into a federation known as the Seventh Congressional District of the Illinois Federation of Women's clubs, of which she was elected vice-president. After a two years' term, she was chosen chairman of the civil service department of the Illinois Federation of Women's clubs, and while acting in this capacity was elected a director in the Civil Service Reform association of Chicago.

In Wednesday's suffrage parade will be Mrs. A. Bradford Whitney of the Chicago Equal Suffrage association; Mrs. H. Wilfred Du Puy of Pittsburgh, who will be one of three women to carry the national suffrage parade banner; Miss Susan P. Ryerson, a daughter of Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, who has been making many parade speeches, and Miss Helen Nagely, who will march with the junior auxiliary of the Chicago Political Equality league.

All of this work being somewhat political, Mrs. Severin came to a forcible realization of how much the ballot would mean for women, and being of Republican convictions, she interested a group of women and together they organized, in August, 1914, the Illinois Women's league, which is now a delegated body directly affiliated with the Republican Cook county central committee, and organized into thirty-five wards and six country districts. Mrs. Severin was chosen president and the incorporators were Mrs. Kickham Scanlan, Mrs. Adam Wolf, Mrs. John F. Devine and Mrs. Thomas H. Byrne, all of whom have held office since that time.

As a proof of the effective work done by this organization in the five weeks preceding the election, they have figures to show that they ran almost 3,500 ahead of the other woman's parties in number voting.

After this election, the Progressive women, with Mrs. Dora Earle as chairman, met in conference with them and it was decided that before the election each party would work for their chosen candidates for mayor, but would unite solidly for the Republican nominee after the primaries. The final result of the conference was to organize the present Republican Woman's association of Illinois, whose object is to unite not only the Progressive and Republican women, but all women who believe in the fundamental principles of the Republican party, hence the organization is strictly non-factional, dividing both honors and responsibility equally.

From the time that the Republican party in Illinois in October, 1914, indorsed unlimited suffrage up until the present convention, Mrs. Severin and Mrs. Earle have been active lobbyists for the cause. As a result of their satisfactory interviews with Senator Sherman, Mr. Reynolds, secretary of the national Republican committee, and many congressmen and representatives, these women feel reasonably certain that the national Republican resolutions committee will report favorably on the subject of suffrage.

Many of the members of this organization belong to both the Congressional union and the National Suffrage association, and will march in the suffrage parade, even though no political banners will be permitted.

The officers are: President, Mrs. William Severin; first vice president, Mrs. Robert R. Levy; second vice president, Mrs. T. D. Palmer; third vice president, Mrs. Marion H. Biel; fourth vice president, Mrs. Frank W. Shepard; recording secretary, Mrs. Marc A. Rolfe; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary B. Richter; assistant corresponding secretary, Mrs. William J. Frisbie; financial secretary, Mrs. Gay E. Bangs; treasurer, Mrs. Dora Earle; sergeant at arms, Mrs. Mollie L. Baruch; assistant sergeant at arms, Mrs. S. C. Iverson.

Miss Marguerite Dunn

The alumnæ of St. Catherine's High school are furnishing entertainment to the graduating class of the school. Miss Marguerite Dunn is a member of the committee in charge of the affairs. The first was a dancing party given last Wednesday night at the Colonial club in Oak Park.

Miss Ruth M. Brann

Miss Ruth Brann is a member of the beauty squad of the carnival of the Commodore council, Knights of Columbus, which is being held at 2856 Washington boulevard. The purpose of the affair is to raise funds to install a gymnasium in the clubhouse.

DOWNTOWN CLUBS.

The Chicago Woman's club will give a reception in honor of the visiting suffragists in the clubrooms, Fine Arts building, on Tuesday from 3 to 6 o'clock. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the National Suffrage association; Miss Alice Paul, president of the Congressional union; Mrs. Harrison Monro Brown, president of the Illinois Equal Suffrage association; Mrs. James W. Morrisson, president of the Chicago Equal Suffrage association; Mrs. Harriet Stockes Thompson, president of the Chicago Political Equality league, and Mrs. Catharine Waugh McCulloch are among those who have been asked to preside at the tea tables. Mrs. George Packard, chairman of the social committee, and her assistants, Mrs. Charles S. Roberts, Mrs. Lewis K. Torbet, Mrs. Robert F. Palmer, Mrs. Andrew P. Coon, Mrs. Homer W. Chandler, and Mrs. Edward J. Wiggin, are in charge of the reception.

On Saturday the Wild Flower Preservation society will take its seventh field trip, visiting the Mount Forest triangle. The party will leave on the 10:30 a. m. Joliet electric car for Willow Springs.

"An Evening with Shakespeare" will be the annual entertainment of the senior members' club of the Girls' Friendly society. It will be given next Saturday evening on the grounds of the National Kindergarten college at 2944 Michigan boulevard. The tableaux will be followed by a dance in the assembly hall. In case of bad weather the entertainment will be given in the assembly hall.

The Chicago chapter of Daughters of the American Revolution will hold a reception for visiting Daughters and distinguished guests to the convention at the Art Institute on Thursday from 3 to 6 p. m.

The Hoosier Woman's Round Table of Chicago at its annual meeting at the home of Mrs. Charles Brock-Jones of Western Springs elected the following officers: President, Mrs. John Wesley Gray; vice president, Mrs. Charles Brock-Jones; secretary, Miss Alice E. Brown; treasurer, Mrs. George A. Seroombe; historian, Miss Lillian Sinzich; directors, Mrs. Frank A. Beale, Mrs. John E. Harper, Mrs. C. M. Teschemacher, and Mrs. Ella M. Woods. Membership in this club is open only to women born in the state of Indiana and who are willing to contribute in some way to the program during the year.

The Radcliff College club of Chicago has elected the following officers: President, Miss Katherine Shortall; vice president, Mrs. R. G. Crandall; secretary, Miss Irene Noble; treasurer, Miss Ida H. Wolff.

The members of the St. Mary's College club of Chicago will leave Chicago on Saturday by special car to be the guests of the Sisters of St. Mary's at Notre Dame for three days.

The Chicago woman's auxiliary to the railway mail service will hold its regular meeting on Wednesday. This will be the last meeting until September. Luncheon will be served at 1 p. m. There will be a business session at 12 o'clock.

The child welfare committee of the Woman's City club, of which Dr. A. Lyndsay Wynekoop is chairman, has charge of the playlet to be given on Friday at 8:15 p. m. at the Church of the Redeemer, Warren avenue and Robey street. The play is called "A Wedding in Fairyland." Children from 3 to 14 years will take part. The money will be used to establish classes for foreign women, to teach them proper care of children during hot weather.

At a meeting held in the Morrison hotel last week a new political league was formed. The name of the new organization will be the Woman's Political Advisory league of Chicago. Mrs. Viola Greene, former president and founder of the Colony club, was elected president and Mrs. W. A. Seeley was elected secretary. The object of the new league will be to investigate and pass upon the fitness of all men and women seeking public office, whether or not the offices can be voted for by women, and to indorse and work for those found efficient. The league will pay particular attention to offices that directly affect the woman and her home. The organization will take special interest in the school board appointments and elections. The league will be nonpartisan. If at any time the different political parties do not bring out proper candidates the league will seek out and endeavor to nominate and elect a suitable man or woman for the office in question.

There will be a P. E. O. luncheon at Marshall Field's tearoom on Wednesday at 12 o'clock with chapter A. D. as hostess.

The regular luncheon of the Woman's Association of Commerce will be held at the Auditorium hotel next Tuesday noon. The feature of the occasion will be the presence of Leslie M. Shaw of Iowa, former secretary of the treasury; Mrs. Frank Lusk, delegate to the Republican convention from Montana, besides delegates from California and other states. The association has extended its hospitality to all visiting delegates and friends of every political convention in session in Chicago, to members of the woman's party and National Suffrage association, by inviting them to become its guests at a luncheon to be given at the plant of Sears, Roebuck & Co. next Friday at noon. Guests will meet at the Auditorium hotel at 12 o'clock.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of Illinois will hold its forty-fifth annual convention in the Auditorium hotel today. The convention will open with the business session at 1:30 p. m. A special program has been arranged for the evening, which will open at 8 o'clock. The Rev. Thomas L. Harmon and the Very Rev. P. J. O'Callaghan will speak.

The next regular meeting of Rothschild & Co. Employés' Social club will be held in the Masonic temple on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. An entertainment will follow the business meeting.

Tomorrow the International New Thought Alliance will meet in the Fine Arts building, 410 South Michigan avenue, at 8 p. m. Mrs. D. H. Besley of Hinsdale will speak.

At the annual meeting in New York of the Daughters of the British Empire reports were read from sixty-one chapters in the United States, the total number of chapters being sixty-eight. Mrs. George Cooke Adams of 650 Rush street, state regent of the order in Illinois, was elected first vice president. Mrs. J. Elliot Langstaff was reëlected national president.

SOUTH SIDE CLUBS.

The Deborahs and Deborah Juniors will give their annual luncheon and entertainment on Thursday at 12:30 o'clock in the marigold room of the Bismarck garden. There will be songs by Mrs. Hannah Rubin and interpretative dances by Mrs. Nell Burke and Miss Mildred Stern. Mrs. J. B. Greenwald is chairman. Mrs. E. Wedeles is president.

The Lewis Champlin Parent-Teacher association will hold its annual business meeting at 2:30 p. m. Tuesday in the assembly hall of the school. Election of officers will take place and chairmen of standing committees will report. Miss Sarah Paine will play a flute solo.

This afternoon at 3 o'clock the regular meeting of the Young Women's auxiliary of the Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society of Chicago will take place at Sinai Social center, Forty-sixth and Grand boulevard. Miss Josephine D. Harrison, Mrs. M. M. Gordon, Miss Ruth Siegel, and Miss Frances Schreitt will give a program arranged by Miss Esther Ginsberg. There will also be a reception to the officers installed on that day, followed by a social. The refreshments will be in charge of Miss Rose Cohen.

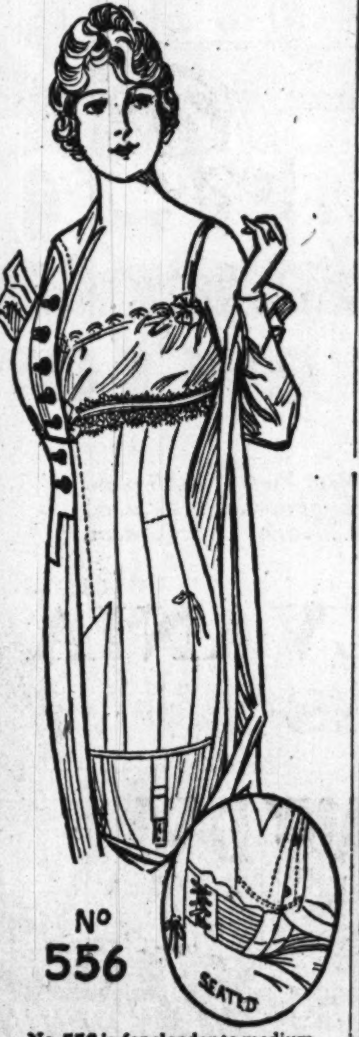
Nemo for VACATION

"WONDERLIFT"
—is the corset for vacation. WHY? Because:
1. It gives you perfect fashion-lines and holds its shape all summer.
2. It stays in place, no matter what you do; won't "ride up," and can't "dig in."
3. It fully protects from physical dangers of strenuous activities. Dance, golf, ride, climb as hard as you wish, your Wonderlift insures you against damage.



No. 556 is for slender to medium figures of average height. Fine mercerized batiste; sizes 20 to 30—$5.00.
Other Wonderlift models for every type (sizes range from 18 to 44)—$5 to $10.
SUGGESTION: Anticipate your Nemo needs before prices advance.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick C. Aldrich of Lake Forest announce the engagement of their daughter, Helen, to Albert Blake Dick Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Blake Dick of Lake Forest.

The engagement has been announced of Miss Jeanette Gemmill, daughter of Judge William N. Gemmill, to Bligh Grasett.

FUTURE EVENTS.

The board of the Woman's Exchange announces an informal reception and opening of its new quarters at 70 East Madison street tomorrow and Tuesday. There will be a special showing of linens and sport hats.

Invitations have been issued for the commencement exercises of the Starrett school for girls, to be held at the First Presbyterian church, at Forty-first and Grand boulevard, at 8 p. m., June 12. The seven young women of the class are the Misses Florence Lepman, Kennetha George, Irene Wallace, Eva Cobain, Grace Mitchell, Edith Haddock and Georgia Hogan.

Mrs. Johanna M. Loeb of 924 East Fiftieth street, is one of the box holders at the concert to be given at the Auditorium theatre next Sunday, the proceeds of which will go to the Jewish war sufferers abroad.

On Thursday evening the graduating exercises of the class of 1916 of the Faulkner school will take place in the Kenwood Evangelical church. Following the exercises at the church a reception in honor of the graduates will be given at the school, 1376 East Forty-eighth street. The graduates are Miss Clara Cary, Miss Amelia Cole, Miss Virginia Chalmers, Miss Marguerite Fellows, Miss Gretchen Harbach, Miss Ruth Huey, Miss Bower Kelly, Miss Emily Kimbrough, Miss Helena Meinrath, Miss Edith Oughton, Miss Elsa Stahl and Miss Josephine Root.

The Casino club, the Saddle and Cycle club, and the South Shore Country club will keep open house for the convention guests. Every afternoon and evening there will be music at the Casino, dancing at the South Shore, and teas and dinners at the Saddle and Cycle.

Preceding the suffrage garden party and ball Mrs. Cyrus Hall McCormick of 50 East Huron street will have a dinner for 100 suffragists of prominence at her residence.

Mrs. Medill McCormick of 936 Lake Shore drive, Mrs. Arthur Meeker of 3030 Lake Shore drive, and Mrs. C. Morse Ely of 909 Lake Shore drive will each have large dinner parties preceding the ball.

On Wednesday at 12 o'clock preceding the suffrage parade there will be a large "suffrage first" luncheon at the Auditorium hotel, at which Miss Helen Keller, Mrs. Inez Milholland Boisevain, Mrs. Rheta Childs Dorr, Mrs. J. A. H. Hopkins, and Mrs. W. D. Ascough will be the speakers and the guests of honor.

On Thursday from 3 to 6 the Republican Woman's association of Illinois will give a reception and tea at the Mansion at Twenty-ninth street and Michigan boulevard. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Mrs. Frederic Upham, Mrs. Frank O. Lowden, Mrs. Medill McCormick, Mrs. Alexander H. Revell, and Mrs. John R. Thompson are among the patronesses.

Lake Forest society is taking an unusual interest in Ravinia park this season. Already dinner reservations have been made for the opening night, July 1. The plan for dinner dances, grand opera, and supper dances after the concert has met with the approbation of the north shore elect. Among those who will entertain at dinner the opening night are Mrs. H. C. Chatfield-Taylor, Mrs. C. M. Ely, Mrs. Charles Garfield King, Mrs. George McKinlock, Mrs. A. Watson Armour, Mrs. Lawrence Armour, Mrs. William Martin, Mrs. George McLaughlin, Mrs. Ezra Warner, Mrs. Stanley Field, Miss Lolita Armour, and Mrs. Leeds Mitchell.

On Friday evening, June 9, Howard F. Gillette and Arthur Meeker will give a large ball for the distinguished delegates. The S. S. Commodore has been chosen for the ball and the affair promises to be unique.

During the three days' festivities attending the South Shore Country club horse show, to be held June 22, 23, and 24, there will be great interest in the aeroplane parties, which have been included on the list of entertainments for horse show week as a result of the success of last year's aeroplaning at the club, when Harold F. McCormick made frequent trips to the club via air and water in his hydro-aeroplane, and Miss Barbara Andrews, a debutante, flew incognita out of the blue sky and alighted to inspect the equine entries. The club is now engaged in making ready the arena and planning for the double tier of 165 boxes, which will face the lake and the arena in a crescent shaped row.

The Lake Forest county fair this season promises to be quite the most extensive and brilliant event of the summer and will far surpass the efforts of past seasons. Friday and Saturday, July 14 and 15, are the dates set and the following men and women will serve as chairmen of the various committees: J. Allen Haines, general chairman; Mrs. Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, chairman on boxes and tickets; James O. Heyworth, chairman on programs; Hugh Garden, chairman on decorations; Mrs. Robert G. McGann, chairman on posters; Francis Jewett Johnson, chairman on gymkana; I. Newton Perry, chairman on grounds; W. O. Lindley, chairman on dog show; Mrs. George D. McLaughlin, Ralph H. Poole, and W. O. Lindley, joint chairmen on flowers and vegetables; Louis F. Swift and W. O. Lindley, joint chairmen on live stock; Charles G. Cushing, Charles S. Dewey, and Uri B. Grannis, joint chairmen on sideshows and concessions; Mrs. J. Allen Haines and Mrs. Ralph Poole, joint chairmen on Arcade committee; Mrs. Finley Barrell, chairmen on vaudeville; Mrs. I. Newton Perry, chairman on domestic arts and kitchen products; Mrs. W. P. Martin and Mrs. Orville Babcock, joint chairmen on refreshments and restaurants; Mrs. D. Mark Cummings, chairman on children's decorated vehicles; Mrs. E. J. Cudahy and Mrs. Austin Niblack, joint chairmen on distributing programs; Mrs. Morris L. Johnston, chairman of publicity, and Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, chairman of the ring committee.

CONVENTION GUESTS.

During the convention Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Meeker will have Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer, Mr. and Mrs. Chandler T. Anderson, William A. Havard, and Oliver Gould Jennings of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene V. R. Fair of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. George Higginson Jr. of 1822 Astor street will have Maj. Henry Higginson of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Higginson, Miss Juliet Higginson, and Eliot Wadsworth, who was with the Rockefeller unit in Serbia. Mrs. Higginson is chairman of the invitation committee of the suffrage ball and garden party.

Mr. and Mrs. John Alden Carpenter of 710 Rush street will entertain Miss Mary White Wiborg and John Alsop.

Mrs. John M. Clark and her daughter, Mrs. Cecil Clark Davis of 847 Lincoln parkway, will have Mrs. Wirt Dexter of Boston and Mrs. William Astor Chanler of New York.

Miss Anne Martin

Miss Anne Martin of Nevada is slated to become the chairman of the Woman's party convention, which will open tomorrow at the Blackstone theater. Miss Martin is a member of the national executive committee of the Congressional union and is president of the Nevada Woman's Civic league.

YOU CAN ALMOST TALK TO HER
—THIS 3400 r. p. m. CHALMERS

They're buying motor cars today as they're hiring men—on ability.

Blue eyes, brown hair, a rugged jaw, mean something—but not so much as they used to.

They're seeking ability. And that is not always measured in stature, weight and reach.

Likewise in a car. They look her over, learn her wheelbase, note the tire sizes, ask the bore and stroke of the engine and then—

They make her perform.

They make her hit the trail, they roll her up the stiffest hill. They let her out on the straightaway, and they make her accelerate at slow speeds.

It's the only way to judge a car. And we're particularly glad, because we have in the 3400 r.p.m. Chalmers a car that answers every human wish.

You can almost talk to this animal. You can lead her anywhere. We know of no one who has ever called on her for too much, nor asked of her anything she couldn't deliver.

She's like a young ballplayer who keeps driving 'em over the right-field fence.

She's there. And the reason is her magnificent 3400 r. p. m. engine. When history in our business is written, 3400 r. p. m. will occupy a thick chapter.

Simply because at the lowest speeds she saves her energy, turns up only 500 r. p. m. at 10 miles an hour, and 1000 r. p. m. at 20 miles an hour.

Thus using only 18 per cent of her power at such speeds and saving 62 to 80 per cent for winding, hilly roads, bad turns, and on occasions when a little extra power gives you possession of the road.

One ride of five miles behind the wheel and you'll own it.

Ask your dealer about Chalmers service inspection coupons, negotiable at all Chalmers dealers everywhere. This system is a most important consideration in buying your car.

Five-Passenger Touring Car,	$1090 Detroit

Three-Passenger Cabriolet,	$1440 Detroit

Color of Touring Car and Roadster—Oriford maroon or Meteor blue. Cabriolet—Oriford maroon, Valentine green, or Meteor blue. Wheels—standard dark, primrose yellow or red. Wire wheels optional on Roadster or Cabriolet at extra cost.

"Sunlight" by Richard O E. Miller

Art Institute Gets Painting by R. E. Miller.

AMONG the recent additions to the permanent collection of the Art institute is the picture of "Sunlight," by Richard E. Miller. It is a charming oil painting done in the broad impressionistic manner of the moderns, and completely enveloped in sparkling, joyous sunshine, and fairly vibrating with life and vitality. The figures are charmingly presented with much feeling for grace and form as well as for sheer feminine loveliness. A splendid example of Miller's genius which is represented in a large number of European galleries as well as many of the prominent American museums.

Arthur Symons has written somewhere that to him cities possess souls. One can say the same, I think, about some interiors. Such a one is this of Miller's actually bathed in atmosphere. It is the kind of painting with which one would enjoy living. Intensely individual, too, as this work is, it is almost unnecessary for Miller to sign his name. It is signed with every stroke of the brush.

Richard E. Miller is an American, born in St. Louis, who received the greater part of his artistic training under Constant and Laurent in Paris. He has paintings hung in the Luxemburg, Paris, and the Museum of the Petit Palais, Paris; in the Museum of Fine Arts, Antwerp; in the Museum at Liege: in the International Gallery of Fine Art, Venice, and in the Gallery of Modern Art Rome. In this country he has work in the Metropolitan museum, New York, and also in various other large cities, including Washington, Buffalo, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Chicago.

Mr. Miller has received many medals abroad and in the United States. In 1900 and 1908 he was awarded two gold medals in Paris and received medals at the Buffalo exposition and at the St. Louis exposition. At the Panama-Pacific exposition he was awarded the gold medal of honor.

There are several exhibitions which are closing at the Art institute this week, so that those of Chicago's public who have not seen these exhibits so far cannot postpone visiting them many more days.

William Ritschel's collection of marines and landscapes, which is occupying an entire room, will close, as will also the exhibition of American water color painters, which includes the Rotary exhibition, the exhibition of minatures, and the paintings of Alexander Robinson.

This combination exhibitions which has been at the Art institute for nearly a month has been one of the best patronized of any of this year's exhibits. It has covered a wide gamut in the varying kinds of popular tastes it has appealed to and has been representative of much fine American work.

Beginning on June 16 there will be an exhibition of art students' work at the institute and in July there is to be an excellent display of paintings by Swedish artists.

Exhibitions at galleries this week:

410 MICHIGAN AVENUE, MATZENE FLOOR—Exhibition of paintings of Holland and France by Pieter J. L. Van Veen, June 5 to June 17.

Moulton & Ricketts—Collective exhibition of paintings by George Joseph Seideneck.

Roullier's—Original etchings by American etchers.

O'Brien's—Paintings by George Inness.

Young's—Paintings by American landscape painters.

Palette and Chisel club—Exhibition of photographs by Bertrand H. Wentworth.

The exhibition of miniatures by Brenda Francklyn at the Art institute, which was to have closed today, will continue for another week.

The TRIBUNE'S WEEKLY ALMANACK

JUNE

JUNE

RED WINGS in the marshes, columbine on the banks; red heads in the orchard and honeysuckle against the wall; gold finch nesting in the juniper and wild geranium in the woods; tanagers friendly in the white oaks and May apple blossoms waxy white in the hollows.

The oven bird sings in the morning and garden truck is green and springing. Esthetics rule; flesh pots are promised. The eye rejoices in the thick green of the woods; the appetite takes coarsely to young green onions and considers robustly the condition of new peas.

Esau, whose belly is his god, is jovial with anticipation and sees where golden bantam has pushed green spears above the soil and Sappho sings with the wood thrush as the evening brings Venus at the end of the after glow.

In hut happiness there is content, in what is here and what will come. The processes are good and promising. Spring has turned vuluptuary, discreetly, but not with shame. June brings the greatest freshness with the greatest richness. Where May left gaps, June has filled them in. What May brought of virginal delicacy, June has not coarsened.

The wild rose is in bud and the orchard hums with bees in the blossoms. Day and night make the two parts of contentment, and in hut happiness it is sufficient to be perceptive.

NEW YORK SOCIETY by MME. Y.

Newport Villa Transfer Recalls a War Tragedy.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Every one will remember the stirring story of how Louis Bruguiere tried to save his mother when the Arabia went down. The two were coming home from a trip abroad, in which they had done a great deal to relieve the horrors of war, which were then settling heavily over the gay capital of the world.

Mrs. Bruguiere dreaded the return and seemed to foretell disaster. When their boat was torpedoed her son made gallant efforts to rescue her. He stayed in the water until he, too, was almost overcome. But to no purpose. His mother was a victim of the great war and the young man was all but broken hearted.

And the significance of this today? The villa that they once owned and occupied at Newport has changed hands. It is always an event—a social event, at least—when property goes from one family to another in our social capital.

There is nearly always something pathetic in the occasion. It means, even if the fact is not evident on the surface, that somebody has been disappointed—that somebody's hopes have not been realized. The man of the family has not been able to maintain the financial position he had counted on, or the woman has not made good socially. They have established themselves in the social center of America with the idea of mingling on intimate terms with the nation's most successful from the worldly point of view. And they have not been able to maintain themselves, or, sadder still, they have discovered that the life is not worth while.

Nobody could ever accuse Mrs. Bruguiere of not being able to maintain herself from the standpoint of manner and patrician personality. She was a lady and many loved her. Moreover, her son has been regarded as one of the beaux of Newport. But just before they went abroad their place was sold at a mortgage sale by the Savings Bank of Newport to Arnold W. Essex of Providence and New York. Last year he died suddenly and bequeathed the estate to a personal friend, Mr. Pierce.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Hanan of New York and Narragansett Pier have just bought the place from him. They expect to divide their time this year between Narragansett Pier and Newport. In their newer home the memory and the fragrance of a former gracious French mistress will give them a background which they will doubtless feel as a beneficent influence through the years.

Settled in Country Homes.

It is absolutely required of those who are of the social elect that by this time of the year all shall be settled in their country houses, or at least that their country houses shall be settled. Weather was bad until late this spring. The ground in the country was wet. And New York was attractive with its million dollar charity bazaars and other amusements.

However, it was required of everybody that they not only have their houses in readiness but that they spend their week ends in the country. Only the hardest rains kept the society dames inside their villas, for it is not now the thing, as in the days of Marian Edgeworth, to be the fragile flower.

At any rate, "preparedness" has been the note of the day with regard to summer entertaining, and now that the good weather has come, Newport is in the best of trim for her summer visitors, although all of the owners of villas have not yet taken possession.

I was up there the other day, and I thought I had never seen the Ocean drive more lovely. The flowers in Mrs. French Vanderbilt's acres of garden never bloomed more challengingly lovely. It was as if they were petitioning her not to move away from the place where she and her little son, now head of the house of Vanderbilt, have lived for so long. You know the boy has come into the big estate of his father, the late Alfred Vanderbilt, and the servants of the place have been expecting them to move in.

In any event, Newport is to be gay. The smart set does not feel inclined to brave the war zone to any extent, and former European travelers are settling contentedly there for the summer.

TABLOID BOOK REVIEW

by FANNY BUTCHER

Sewell Ford, Slang Artist, Once Highbrow.

Last week's best sellers in a leading Chicago book store:

WAR.

"Kitchener's Mob" (Houghton-Mifflin) by Henry Hall.

FICTION.

"Nane of Music Mountain" (Scribner), by Frank Spearman.

"Seventeen" (Harper), by Booth Tarkington.

"Cappy Ricks" (Sly), by Peter Kyne.

"The Little Lady of the Big House" (Macmillan), by Jack London.

"Under the Country Sky" (Doubleday-Page), by Grace Richmond.

"Bars of Iron" (Putnam), by Ethel M. Dell.

NONFICTION.

"Eat and Grow Thin" (Dutton), by Vance Thompson.

Sewell Ford and his front door at Clearwater, Fla.

SEWELL FORD, the creator of Shorty McCabe and Torchy, was in town last week, and we had a little chat about the things that I thought the Tabloidites would be interested in. He's not very tall, Sewell Ford, and despite the fact that he has a son two years out of Harvard he looks like a mischievous little boy.

His two enthusaisms are the country and golf. He has a house, just the way he likes it, down in Clearwater, Fla. Every morning he works two or three hours and every afternoon he plays golf.

"I work very slowly," he said. "It takes me three or four days to get the first half of a story done. Sometimes I can finish it in another day, though. I never start to write until I know exactly what I am going to say. Often I have the phrasing of sentences or paragraphs firmly fixed in my mind before I have written a word. I always write in an attic if I can find one. I have a beautiful one in my home, 30x45, with two big dormers, and I do every bit of my work up there. Whenever I go visiting I go straight to the attic to work. I don't mind how many trunks or barrels or mysterious looking bundles are around. All I ask is a table and my pad of paper. I write in longhand first and type my stuff afterwards. I do the typing myself because I always think that I am going to do a lot of revising. Actually I do very little, a word here or there, but I never make any radical changes. I do two stories a month, never more than that."

"How did you happen upon Shorty McCabe?" I asked him.

He smiled. "It's a long story. I was once a newspaper man—in fact, I got to be managing editor of the American Press association—but I wasn't anything of an executive. I would much rather sit down to a typewriter and do something myself than get somebody else to do it. I kept going backwards until I was afraid I'd be head office boy in a few months, so I quit the newspaper game.

"I had been writing stories, what you call highbrow tales, with lots of literary style. You mightn't think so from my so-called slang stories, but I was really supposed to have quite a literary turn to my stuff. Stories like that don't pay so very much except in self-esteem, and I began to get worried about the rent of my much too expensive apartment which I had taken with visions of an affluent author's future before me, and one day I went out and bought a copy of Collier's.

"I'd done some stuff for them and I thought I could turn it over quick if I wrote a story. I read a supposedly humorous story in it, and I said to myself, 'I'll do something so absurd that'll look like a serious document.' So I wrote the most absurd story I could think of, about an ex-prizefighter, Shorty McCabe. He was almost exactly like a fellow I knew except that his fighting past was pure fiction. Collier's took it and printed it.

"Then I said, 'If I can do an absurd story about this thing I can do a good one,' so I set about another story that I thought was good. When I took it to Collier's they wouldn't have anything to do with it. I peddled it around and finally I left it at the Associated Sunday Magazines. After two days they telephoned to me about it, said they wanted me to do ten more. I didn't stop to swallow before I said sure I'd do it. When I started the first of the ten I thought I could never get ten stories out of Shorty McCabe. That was ten years ago, and I'm still writing them.

"When I first started them I used to feel very misunderstood because people said I wrote slang stories. I don't mind any more. It isn't slang, of course, but just personal metaphor, Manhattan figurative colloquialisms."

The latest collection of Mr. Ford's stories is "Torchy, Private Secretary" (Clode). They are unique in the field of American humor and jolly little tales of human traits.

"I can never remember when I did not write," says Rachel S. Macnamara, author of "Drifting Waters" (Putnam), "or rather, to be accurate, I used to compose little rhymes before I could write, which my elder sister used to jot down for me." She wrote desultorily for magazines without a thought of becoming a novelist exclusively until her first book was accepted within a week of its receipt by her publishers, the Blockwoods of Edinburgh.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cooper's name should be Drusilla. She's the author of "Drusilla with a Million" (Harpers), and she has just returned from a long trip to Cuba in time to start out with her husband on a leisurely jaunt through South America.

The last Susan Clegg stories from the pen of the late Anne Warner are published under the title "Susan Clegg and Her Love Affairs" (Little-Brown).

In an interview which John Burroughs granted not long ago to an eastern journalist he said: "Whitman is the greatest poet America has produced. He is great with the qualities that make Homer and the classic poets great. Emerson is more precious, more intellectual. Whitman and Emerson are our two greatest poets."

"Zeppelins and Super-Zeppelins" (John Lane) is a book which answers most of the questions about these fascinating war creatures which one is liable to ask. It is written by R. P. Hearne, whose "Aerial Warfare," published eight years ago, was one of the first published on the subject which called attention to the Zeppelin menace.

A modern Robinson Crusoe is Alpheus Hyatt Verrill's "Marooned in the Forest" (Harper's). When his upturned canoe, as well as his guide, disappeared down the rapids, a young man found himself thrown upon his own resources for food, shelter, and the discovery of a way out to civilization, with a handkerchief and a small penknife as his only assets. How he got out makes the story.

Not long ago it was announced that the publication of the second volume of Maxim Gorky's autobiography would be indefinitely postponed because the English translation and the printed sheets of the book were both interned in Berlin until the war ceases. The Century company has just received word that the second volume is now running serially in a Russian magazine. They are planning to undertake a new translation and they now hope to be able to offer before long the second volume, which is to be called "In the World."

There is now "The Book of Italy" (Stokes), edited by Raffaelo Piccoli, under the auspices of Queen Elena. Among the writers who have contributed are John Galsworthy, Sidney Lee, and Gilbert Murray, and among the illustrators Sargent and Pennell.

Dorothy Canfield Fisher, whose new book "Self-Reliance" (Bobbs-Merrill) is going through the press expects to sail for France chortly, purpose of sailing unknown.

A new book by Arthur Gleason, author of "Young Hilda at the Wars," is promised soon by the Century company. It is called "Golden Lads," and will be composed of sketches and observations of an American stretcher bearer in the Belgian army. Mr. Gleason was for five months a member of the famous Hector Munro ambulance corps, which was permitted to work on the front line because it was under the military leadership of the son of the Belgian prime minister. He worked with the Belgian army and the Fusiliers Marins of France. He was twice a German prisoner, and he was an eye witness of atrocities which he describes with fervor in "Golden Lads."

"The Little Lady of the Big House" (Macmillan) is the most un-Londonesque title that one could imagine. It sounds like a serial in a woman's fashion magazine. It is, however, the title of the latest book from the virile pen of Jack London.

Molla Bjurstedt, author of "Tennis for Women" (Doubleday-Page) and champion of every tennis match she has enterd, is a Norwegian masseuse by profession, and she does massaging half the year and wins tennis matches the other half.

The British censor has suppressed Mary Roberts Rinehart's war book, "Kings, Queens, and Pawns" (Doran), on the ground that it contains information of value to the Germans, but Mrs. Rinehart firmly believes that the reason for its suppression is that it contains an interview with Queen Mary.

In his "Rudyard Kipling" R. Thurston Hopkins quotes some verses dealing with the astonishment of the eighteen-nineties at the financial success of a poet written by T. W. H. Crosland:

I went into a publisher's as woeful as a hearse,
The publisher he ups and says, "Why will you chaps write verse?"
The girl behind the Remington she titteres fit to die,
I outs into the street again and to myself says I:

"O, it's verses this, and verses that, and writing 'em is wrong;
But, it's 'special type and vellum' when you hit on something strong,
You hit on something strong, my boys, you hit on something strong,
O, it's 'signed large paper copies,' when you hit on something strong.

"We ain't no 'eavenly Miltons, nor we ain't no idiots, too,
But plodding men with fam'lies, and a pile to make, like you;
And all the time you see us down at heel and looking weak,
We're a-casting our bread upon the waters, so to speak;

"For it's verses this, and verses that, and things run pretty rough,
But there's Albert Gate in verses if you only write the stuff.
If you only write the stuff, my boys, if you only write the stuff,
O, it's yachts and rows of houses if you only write the stuff."

News of the Religious World

Committee Asks Chicago Visitors to Attend Church

By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

THE mayor's entertainment committee has issued a special invitation to visitors in Chicago to attend divine service today and next Sunday, if the conventions are still in session at that time. The invitation reads:

"In behalf of the mayor's committee on entertainment the delegates to the Republican and Progressive national conventions and their friends are most cordially invited to attend religious services in the churches of Chicago June 4 and 11. The visitors will be heartily welcomed in the sanctuaries of religion. The location of all denominations may be found in the hotel registers and in the church columns of the daily press. Automobiles will be furnished for the use of visitors desiring to attend worship upon application to the mayor's entertainment committee."

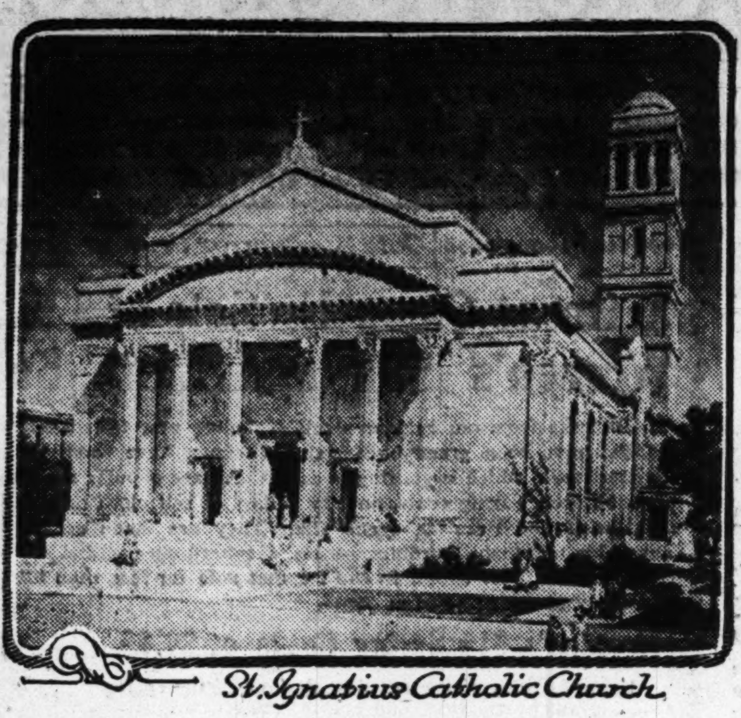
The appeal is signed: The Rev. John P. Brushingham, South Park Avenue Methodist Episcopal church; the Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, Central church, Auditorium theater; the Rev. John Timothy Stone, Fourth Presbyterian church; the Rev. Father Joseph McNamee, St. David's Roman Catholic church; the Rev. Johnston Myers, Immanuel Baptist church; Rabbi Tobias Schanfarber, Temple Kehilith Anshe Mayriv; the Rev. E. J. Randall, St. Barnabas' Protestant Episcopal church, and the Rev. B. F. Aldrich, New First Congregational church.

Two theological schools will begin work on new buildings, one tomorrow and the other on Tuesday.

The Garrett Biblical institute, Evanston, will lay the corner stone for the construction of a $150,000 dormitory, which is to be the first building in a new theological group in a new location. Heck hall, the old dormitory, was burned, and Memorial hall, where recitations have been held, will be transferred to Northwestern university as soon as the new buildings are erected. The ceremony will be held in connection with the alumni and Chicago ministers' meeting. Bishop Thomas Nicholson will speak.

The divinity school of the University of Chicago will break ground for a new building Tuesday noon which was provided by a special gift of $200,000. The divinity school is celebrating its fiftieth anniversary and the university its twenty-fifth anniversary. The divinity school was formerly located at Morgan Park. The special half century celebration will be held tomorrow, beginning at 2 o'clock, in Mandell hall. President Harry Pratt Judson will preside. Dean Shailer Mathews will make the historical statement and addresses will be delivered by the Rev. Prof. A. C. McGiffert and the Rev. President W. H. P. Faunce. On Tuesday the convocation will be held in Haskell hall, the ground breaking following at noon.

The Chicago Christian Endeavor union will give a banquet at the Hotel Sherman next Thursday evening. Dr. William Shaw, general secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, will be the special guest. The members of the executive committee and the presidents of the different societies which compose the union will be present. Plans will be made for the Illinois state Christian Endeavor convention, which will be held at Freeport July 6-9.



St. Ignatius Catholic Church.

The St. Ignatius Catholic church, which for a number of years has been located near the corner of Devon avenue and Broadway, is to have a new location and a splendid new building. The new location is at Glenwood and Loyola avenues, and work has been in progress on the new structure for a week.

The new building, which will be constructed entirely of Bedford stone, will be 100x200 feet and will contain an auditorium which will seat approximately 1,000. There will also be a chapel seating 250, a meeting hall, a meeting room, and two sacristies. The cost will be $155,000.

Interest is added to the church by reason of its nearness to the Loyola university. The pastor is the Rev. D. M. Johnson, S. J. The architect is Henry J. Schlacks.

The church, being exposed to view from all sides, is finished in every detail, so as to give a pleasing effect on all of its fronts. The portico is supported by six Corinthian columns of the Marcus Aurelius type. Standing free on one corner is a Roman campanile twenty feet square and rising to a height of 120 feet. There are no standing columns in the interior, so that an unobstructed view will be had from all parts of the aditorium.

The Baptist Young People's union, which was organized in Chicago twenty-five years ago, will hold its twenty-fifth anniversary in the Coliseum July 6 to 9. The organization is a national one and delegates are expected to be present from all sections of the country. Plans are being made for an attendance of 10,000. Two weeks from today Baptist pastors will exchange pulpits and preach on young people's work. It is said the cost of the preparation of the Coliseum for the convention was $22,000. The president of the union is the Rev. Frank L. Anderson of Chicago, who will deliver the president's address. The convention sermon will be preached by the Rev. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Baptist Theological seminary, Louisville, Ky. Dean Shailer Mathews will speak on "Baptist Coöperatively." The general secretary of the union is the Rev. James A. White of Chicago.

The American Baptist year book has just been issued. The statistics show that there are in the United States 51,248 churches, a decrease of 1,162; 39,926 ordained ministers, a decrease of 445. Such a decrease of churches and ministers during 1915 must be due to imperfect reports. During the year 1914 there was reported an increase of 413 churches and 1,262 ministers. The total membership is given at 6,107,686, an increase of 175,322.

During the year 1915 there were received into the churches by baptism 339,645, an increase over the baptisms of the previous year of 30,402. There are 43,597 Sunday schools, an increase of 828 during 1915; 335,620 officers and teachers, an increase of 10,145; 4,535,038 pupils, an increase of 246,136.

There was given for church expenses $22,676,989, an increase of $250,741; for Sunday school expenses, $1,223,869, an increase of $145,860; for state missions, $993,180, a decrease of $66,734; for home missions, $924,645, a decrease of $41,053; for foreign missions, $1,211,901, a decrease of $10,763; for Bible and publication work, $107,507, a decrease of $5,112; for education, $554,555, an increase of $130,164; for miscellaneous, $2,044,801, an increase of $137,313—making a grand total of $29,782,329, an increase of $739,148. The total value of church property is given at $173,705,800, an increase of $648,513.

A convention in the interests of the retired ministers, ministers' widows, and dependent children will be held in the First Methodist Episcopal church, Aurora, Ill., tomorrow and Tuesday. The convention will be in charge of the Rev. Frank D. Sheets, district superintendent. Among the speakers will be the Rev. John Thompson, the Rev. Harvey Reeves Calkins, the Rev. C. A. Kelley, the Rev. E. C. Clemans, and Frank Nay, all of Chicago; the Rev. F. D. Stone, Elgin; the Rev. J. M. Schneider, Joliet, and the Rev. C. J. Bready, pastor First church, Aurora. The guests will be entertained for dinner at Jennings seminary.

The Lutheran Woman's league will meet on Tuesday, June 13, at the Lutheran seminary, Maywood, Ill. There will be vocal, piano, and violin selections, and addresses by Dr. Grace Baksh on "Foreign Missions" and Mrs. L. R. Harrisville on "The Value of the Home Base."

The Chicago conference of the Northern Illinois synod of the Lutheran church will convene June 19 and 20 in Christ church, Spaulding and Wilson avenues. The general synod's ministers' union will meet at 3 o'clock and the conference will begin at 7:45. The entire program will be given to the discussion of the instruction, entertainment, and work for young people. The discussions will include the social and athletic features of young people's organizations as well as the amount of supervision needed to safeguard them. The opening address will be by the Rev. Dr. C. E. Derr, followed by discussions by the Rev. N. J. Hadley and the Rev. T. F. Dornblaser. Communion will be administered Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock.

Bishop Thomas Nicholson, who succeeds Bishop W. F. McDowell as the resident bishop in Chicago, will preach his first sermon in Chicago this morning at 10:30 o'clock in the Western Avenue Methodist Episcopal church, Western avenue and Monroe street. In the evening he will preach in the Fowler church, Twenty-third street and Millard avenue.

Bishop Charles Bayard Mitchell will preach his farewell sermons morning and evening in the St. James' Methodist Episcopal church, Ellis avenue and Forty-sixth street.

The Jefferson Park Presbyterian church is fifty years old and is preparing to celebrate its golden jubilee, although the exact date is not yet fixed. The church was at one time ministered to by the Rev. Francis A. Patton, who led in the attack on Prof. David Swing, which led to Prof. Swing's withdrawal from the Presbyterian ministry. Dr. Patton afterwards became president of Princeton university and of Princeton Theological seminary. The evangelist "Billy" Sunday was a member of the church and was superintendent of the Sunday school before entering upon his public career. The church now carries on institutional work among several nationalities. The Rev. Francis J. Martin is pastor.

The Congregational Training School for Women in Chicago will hold its commencement in the Warren Avenue Congregational church tomorrow evening. The address will be given by the Rev. William H. Spence of Hinsdale and the welcome to the graduates to service in the churches will be given by the Rev. Ozora S. Davis, president of the Congregational Theological seminary.

Archbishop G. W. Mundelein's appointments for this week are:

Today—St. Adelbert's, confirmation, afternoon.

Tomorrow—St. Mel's, confirmation, 10 a. m.

Tuesday—St. Thomas the Apostle, confirmation, 10:30 a. m.

Wednesday—Momence, Ill., dedication of new church, morning; St. Anne, Ill., confirmation, afternoon.

Thursday—St. Xavier's academy, 3 p. m.

Friday—St. Patrick's academy, 3 p. m.; Loretto academy, evening.

Potato raising for missionary purposes is interesting the members of the Christ Presbyterian church, Orchard and Center streets, of which the Rev. Thomas W. Stewart is pastor.

More than two years ago a large potato was sent by a frontier church in Minnesota suggesting that the potato might be planted and its profits used in helping the frontier work. The first potato yielded a crop of ten potatoes. Nine of these were sent to Isbell, S. D., where they were set out, while one potato was kept in Chicago for further planting. The crop from these ten potatoes filled a bushel basket. Members of Christ church who have spare ground in their yards have been planting these potatoes this month. Prizes for the largest, best, and smallest potatoes are being offered and next year it is hoped the crop will amount to thirty bushels and the proceeds will be sent to the Minnesota frontier church. F. P. Duerr, 2026 Fletcher street, has the enterprise in hand.

Let Us Plan Your Vacation Trip

No matter whether it be a trip round South America, to far away Japan, to ancient Peru, or a short jaunt on the Great Lakes, is at your service.

The American Express Travel Dept.

We will tell you the best trips that can be made; furnish you descriptive and illustrated literature and a complete itinerary of your trip, tickets and travelers' cheques; make your hotel reservations; and in many other ways provide in advance for your comfort when you travel.

You simply advise where and how you want to go and we will tell you just how much the complete trip will cost. You can then plan accordingly.

Send for booklets describing our small, select, conducted parties to Alaska in June and July, South America and Japan in July, and ancient Peru—"The Land of the Incas"—June 24th.

American Express Travelers' Cheques are as much a part of a well ordered journey as first class railroad or steamship accommodations.

Telephone Randolph 3922, or call at our Ticket Office, 23 West Monroe Street, or at any of our Branch Offices.

Where to Spend Your Summer Vacation

ILLINOIS. ILLINOIS. ILLINOIS.

Chicago's Famous South Side Hotel Center

Don't be a Stranger in Chicago!

IT'S LONELY, stopping downtown in a loop hotel, even when your stay is only for a few days. How much pleasanter to spend this time at one of Chicago's fine residential hotels in the neighborhood of homes—hotels that are the permanent homes of innumerable Chicagoans—that offer a companionable social atmosphere even to the most transient guest.

The four hotels whose names appear below invite transient patronage, offering accommodations on either American or European plan and the same luxurious comfort and service that will be found downtown.

Twelve-minute express service takes you to the centre of the theatre, shopping and business district. Your business and your amusements are right at your door, as are the parks, boulevards, and beautiful lake shore of the finest residence district of Chicago.

Address any of the hotels here illustrated for choice reservations during Republican Convention week.

BALDWIN

WHERE THE GAME FISH ARE

The favorite haunt of Michigan sportsmen for thirty years. Its brooks and lakes teem with trout, bass, pike, pickerel, bluegills and perch. Though fished by thousands, they are never depleted, because the natural hazards have been left untouched, providing perfect breeding grounds; and 3,000,000 fry are planted annually. 27 lakes and 12 trout streams within six miles of town, including the famous Pere Marquette river and its branches, Michigan's most noted trout waters. Motor boating, rowing, bathing. Good gravel roads, fine water, dry air; 460 feet above Lake Michigan. On West Mich. Pike. Camping sites free. Get away from the fashionable centers and back to nature, where your vacation means rest, health, pleasure and less expense. Hotels, farm homes, furnished cottages. No fancy prices. Write

Women visitors of Chicago should make a note to be sure to visit the exclusive specialty shops in the upper portion of the Stevens Building before leaving the city. There are almost one hundred of these shops and more are opening every week. Among those which will open this week is the Haskell Trunk Co., which has a coast-wide reputation on its trunks and bags. They hope to have their magnificent new shop open by Thursday. All of these shops are especially attractive in their lines and are the shops which are so freely patronized by the discriminating women of Chicago who want exclusive things.

LACED
CORSETS

Beautifully made in the very latest models and in materials which we could not duplicate at from two to three times the price we ask.

These materials include beautiful silk batiste, satin finish broche, imported coutils, grenadines and plain batistes.

No. 1.—An unusual value for full figure, made of firm quality coutil. Long broad front steels reinforced across abdomen for additional support, bust medium low and full. Price.............................. $1.00

No. 2.—Splendid model made of pink and white satin stripe batiste, low and medium length skirt, positively the best value ever shown at the price.............................. $2.00

No. 3.—Special value in laced in front corsets for medium and slender figures, firmly but lightly boned, made of dainty pink and white satin striped batiste with elastic insert across bottom of bones in back, with shield in front under laces. Very special price.................. $2.00

No. 4—In this lot we have placed six laced front models usually priced from $5.00 to $7.50, in models for slender and medium figures. Not all sizes in any one material, but all sizes in the assortment, strictly new and perfect fitting corsets, made of broche and satin striped coutil, pink and white. Unheard of values, sizes 19 to 28.............................. $3.50

Anticipating the difficulty in securing materials even at advance prices, we placed orders for materials months ago to be used in our newest model corsets for our June sale. This is a rare opportunity. Don't fail to see them.

No. 5.—Gardenia (laced in front corset) for the tall, medium figure, made of imported satin figured broche in dainty pink, medium bust, slightly curved waistline and long skirt, with elastic inserted across bottom of bones in back, wonderfully attractive value, sizes 22 to 31.... $5.00

No. 6—An attractive and unusual corset for slender and medium figures requiring a very low bust, which will prove most comfortable for summer wear. In mercerized broche, pink only.................. $3.50

No. 7.—Stevens' Special corset for medium tall figures, made of dainty figured mercerized broche in pink and white, skirt medium length, top of sufficient height and fullness to allow room to encase the bust and shoulder, waist slightly nipped at side front; back absolutely flat; an extremely comfortable and satisfactory corset, exceptional value......... $5.00

You must see these fabrics in these corsets to fully appreciate their values.

Advising the Statesmen What Play to Attend.

BY PERCY HAMMOND.

THIS column, anxious to participate in the current hospitalities, resolves itself today into a sort of guide post for the benefit of our guests of the impending Sanhedrin. To what drama shall they be directed for refreshment during the anguish and agony of their deliberations at the Coliseum? What entertainments have we that will inspire them with the import of their profound and holy function, and at the same time recreate and invigor them?

Having attended and observed the sessions of the convocation of four years ago I feel qualified, in a minor way, to act as counsellor. I base my confidence in the matter of a remembrance of the proceedings of one afternoon in particular. Mr. W. J. Bryan and I, as Mr. Jack Lait would say, were sitting together in the press stand, he unshaven, and celluloid as to linen, I, of course, immaculately Capper and Cappered.

Mrs. Bryan, a wholesome Nebraskan, adjoined us, and the amazed correspondents of the London Times and the London Morning Post were near at hand, wondering what it was all about. "This," whispered the Times man to the man of the Morning Post, "reminds me of the Field of the Cloth of Gold, because it is so different; a Republic in the pangs of a presidential accouchement appears to have its obscene and vulgar, though its human aspects, with few of the decorative and picturesque features of a monarchy in the placid throes of evolution." Those were his words, heard above the wailing of a syncopatic saxophone band. The convention was something like a hypocritical cabaret, meaning little but eventual remorse.

Participating in this cabaret was a lady in the balcony who, possessing a megaphone and a cruel disposition, insisted upon singing and singing a merciless ballad entitled "Moonlight Bay," against a background composed of a banner inscribed with the advertisement of a song publisher who must have had something on a national committeeman.

Immediately in front of us were patriotic members of the Illinois delegation of deliberators, engaged in fisticuffs. Now and then from their heads, bloody but unbowed, came new, startling, and impolite terms of objurgation; and the pale, gelid, and austere Mr. Deneen, then the governor of this commonwealth, had difficulty in terminating the sanguinary controversy. Many of the statesmen present were in their shirtsleeves, that symbolic American regalia, and a modest though blonde and impassioned female added to the dignity of the proceedings by doing something or other with a flag while wearing a red dress. The senile Mr. Root meanwhile was adopting certain mechanical and irrevocable postures at the behest of other more virile legislators, who, paunchy and ponderous, lurked in the offing. I recall that all of this patriotic fervor was held in contempt by the delegation from New York, which sat indifferent and aloof, reading the afternoon papers in the midst of the turmoil. So sanctified did I feel after the adjournment that with more or less difficulty I refrained from hurrying forth and paying my long neglected dues in the Sons of Veterans and the Sons of the Revolution.

With this information at hand I prescribe for the diversion of our elder statesmen and their friends "A World of Pleasure," which is visible at the Palace. This play, I may repeat, as advice to visitors, is the annual Aphrodisia of the Messrs. Shubert from the Winter Garden, New York. It has many of the comic aspects of a presidential convention, but, embroidered as it is with the colorful and fleshly attributes of honest and candid extravaganza, it is almost as amusing and much less sinister. Those ardent patriots, the Messrs. Shubert, and their equally fervent accessories, the coryphees of the Winter Garden, present in "A World of Pleasure' a starred and striped finale, which ought to make any of us regret that we have but one life to give for our country. Celebrating as it does the dubious efficacy of the Melting Pot, it ends in a caloric tumult of feminine flanks, thighs, bosoms, and hips, beaving patriotically to the cadences of "The Star Spangled Banner" and causing us all to leave our seats and stand in reverence. This, I think, our guests will find to be a characteristic evocation of national sentiment. Since we stood in tribute to the contours of the "Follies," and hissed the rough northern soldiers who in "The Birth of a Nation" were so mean to the southern and congenial rebels, nothing has transpired which so symbolizes how strong we are for this land of the Pilgrims' pride.

Thus, with so brave an investiture of Valley Forge and Appomattox we may resume our seats at "A World of Pleasure" and witness, without shrinking, an unprecedented exposition of the undressed female form. There is rather a polite libretto in "The World of Pleasure"; nothing is said in it that you can't repeat to a friend in a barroom. But its costuming is the most stupendous example of sartorial intrepidity that I have ever seen in a theater. It may not, with propriety, be described, except to say that in pigment, fabric and contents it is pleasing to the pagan eye.

Moreover, "A World of Pleasure" boasts a bright, literate, and mannerly comedian in Mr. Clifton Crawford, who drifts gracefully and humorously through its many spectacular tableaux, mitigating the banality of its words and music with his own wit and personality. Mr. Crawford is by birth a Scot, I am told, but he is by choice an enthusiastic American. His interpolated petition to his audiences, on behalf of preparedness, though imperfect in several phases, has the admirable qualities of sanity and sincerity. I suspect that that bit of propaganda, inserted in a gaudy, irresponsible, and booray atmosphere, is more potent than much that is said to us from the stage by those who are more solemnly our dramatic preceptors.

Slow Curtain for Music Season: Summer Lures

BY ERIC DE LAMARTER.

BEFORE putting on the blinds and turning off the gas for the summer preliminary to refuge among the sand flies and the unlicensed milk and other vacation comestibles of doubtful quality, let us survey the imminent musical future of this city. Let us be neither cynical nor rhapsodic about the season past or the outlook for negligee art.

Those of us who have summered here know what to expect; those who haven't will not be able to comprehend the joys in store; nor will they have basis for invidious comparison. They will go about among park bands unscathed from advice; they will voyage to Ravinia park in the fervor all we inveterates have toted for years; they will sit in the bleachers at the Cubs' ball park on the evening of June 15 and root for Siegfried, no doubt, shrilling anathema at Fafner and informing Wotan that he has a "glass eye," in memory of the days when it was the height of form to advise the visiting pitcher of an arm of similar substance. This will be only one of their distractions, however, while Ravinia, Midway Gardens, and the bally-hoo parks will be persistent and alluring.

It will be toward Ravinia and the Midway Gardens that your "Chicago is the one best summer resort" music crank will turn most assiduously, no doubt. For his delight the news of the former's first opera bill is hereby revealed, that he may sharpen his memory of the score in plenty of time. "Lucia" is to be the initial offering, with Mabel Garrison, the American coloratura soprano; Orville Harrold, the lyric tenor, and Henri Scott, the indomitable bass, in the cast. Rosina Galli's ballet will be given after the opera performance.

The altruism of a small circle of friends brought about the organization of a series of free concerts in the small parks some few years ago. Chief of this group, in my memory, was Arnold Dresden, since become a luminary of the faculty of Wisconsin university. Because a choral society of which I was an unimportant member contributed several programs to the cause, I felt justified (the glamor of singing to wriggling small boys having worn off) in arguing from actual experience with Miss Frances Brundage as to the ethics of the proposition. This was about the time of the Civic Music association's organization. It seemed to me then, and it seems now, that to urge the charity of musicians who pay bills by their playing was unfair economics. Were this commonwealth entirely a practical, working socialism, well and good. But I never heard of a dentist's doing parlor tricks with the forceps for the fun of it, or the repair shop's refusing good cash for a new carburetor.

Since the old days, I understand, the concerts have been systematized and something tangible provided for the musicians. Much or little, it doesn't matter: the principle of the thing is the important element. Many of the artists, too, have contributed their cheques to "the cause," which is evidence enough in itself that the spirit is right, even though our society's economic scheme be absurd.

But this idea of free concerts never seemed ideal, at that—for no public values highly the thing to which, on its own part, it does not give something, be it time, effort, cash, study, whatnot. Therefore, the developing choral work under the supervision of the Civic Music association demands hearty indorsement, for it is a definite scheme of esthetics, competently directed, giving pleasure and usefulness and receiving loyalty and effort.

The second annual spring festival of the assembled clubs of the association will be held this afternoon at the Harrison Technical High school. Edward Collins, who has written and scored several works for the occasion, will direct a part of the program; Mari Ruef Hofer, another, and Rossetter G. Cole, the third. Folk songs, a childrens' choir, orchestral numbers, three Shakespearean songs (one from the pen of Edward C. Moore, tone-poet, pedagogue, and critic) and a few community hymns are to be the features of the day. There is no admission fee.

Frantic news from the Auditorium discloses the fact of George Hamlin's engagement with the Chicago Opera company for next season. He will create the hero's rôle in Victor Herbert's new opera, "Marguerite." Florence Macbeth, the coloratura soprano, will be a guest singer. The same font of information relates Helen Stanley's name to the roster of the Ellis-Campanini troupe beginning a several weeks' tour at Detroit Oct. 16. Three operas will comprise the repertory, one being "Carmen."

Ratan Devi, with her husband, Dr. Amanda Coomaraswamy, will minister again to this public at the Little theater beginning tonight. Her first series of recitals of Indian ragas and Kashmiri folk songs proved to be one of the striking contributions to the music season now defunct. Dr. Coomaraswamy also will give a series of four morning lectures on the arts, thought, literature, and music of India and Ceylon, beginning Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

This function, including the congregational singing of national airs and the imminent "community sings," is only one manifestation of the epidemic for open air concerts and elephantine choirs. The success of opera in the Harvard stadium last season is partly responsible for the performance today of Verdi's Requiem at the Polo grounds in New York. One thousand three hundred and forty-two people will be involved, of which 120 will be in the orchestra. Wonderful judgment of proportion, isn't it! On June 6, too, Franklin field will be the stage for a performance of "Aida" with real camels and real "beasts of the jungle." The original Rhadames is promised, but no one will pay much attention to him. Beasts of the jungle and true camels will bask in the spotlight. Think what this refining of operatic ideals will mean—bona fide consumptives in "Traviata" instead of fat dowagers; lovely looking tenors who can sing; an honest dragon for Siegfried; a veritable harp for Tannhäuser and his rivals, and veracious harping on the harps instead of the absent minded delsarte hitherto in vogue; a swan that will not make "Parsifal" audiences laugh and feel sorry for the stage manager; a Thais who will follow out the suggestion of the first act's "tag"—and myriad others! If moving "Aida" to Franklin field will accomplish so much, let's transport our entire organization into the middle of Grant park?

Burns Mantle's Theater Letter from New York.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.] — The community spirit in New York is like the hair on the back of a Mexican dog—it ain't. Not, at least, if one except those neighborhood houses which are the centers of social activity in sections populated almost exclusively by Americans in the making.

There is a community spirit in certain divisions of the east side, in the Ghetto and Little Italy, but not at all above Fourteenth street, and none that is interchangeable as between the east and west sides, or between one center and another.

And there should be. At least so concluded several of our more progressive citizens, urged on by the Drama league and Percy Mackaye, the well known writer of community masques. Those interested had several meetings, and as a result of these it was decided that Mr. Mackaye should write a masque with which New York could fittingly celebrate the Shakespeare tercentenary and that through its performance by various groups of eager citizens a community spirit should be developed.

The mayor thereupon appointed a committee, with Otto Kahn, millionaire and art enthusiast, as chairman. This committee accepted Mr. Mackaye's scenario of a masque to be called "Caliban by the Yellow Sands" and the enterprise was launched.

At first it was decided the masque should be given in what is known as the sheep meadow of Central park, where it was estimated a crowd of 50,000 citizens could view it. There should be grand stands for those caring to pay for a better view, as seats are sold in the stands at the running of the Derby at Epsom and for the races in the Bois de Boulogne in Paris, but there should also be several acres of room for the proletariates.

But no sooner was announcement of this tentative plan made than all those who do not favor the spreading of the community spirit, not, at least, at the expense of the grass in the sheep meadow, began filing protests. Most of them wrote the editor about it and all of them fussed furiously. With the result that the committee agreed to transfer the entertainment to the stadium of City college. They were pretty mad, these enthusiasts, though they realized spreading a community spirit in a city that believes it has no use for one is a fighting job.

And last week the first performance of "Caliban" was given.

The stadium ordinarily seats 8,000 persons. By duplicating the size of it in wood and completing the oval, seats were provided for 18,000, and at several performances there have been that many spectators present. The masque is given at night only, and the lighting of it, directed from a tower at back, is one of its most attractive features. Strong searchlights, masked with slides of varying color, flood the "yellow sands" fronting a compromise Greek and Elizabethan stage with artificial sunlight or moonlight as the occasion demanded.

The principal characters in the masque were taken from "The Tempest"—Caliban, Prospero, Miranda, and Aried—and its motto from the text, "Come unto these yellow sands and then take hands." The theme, as Mr. Mackaye kindly explained to those who were a bit mystified by the symbolism, is "the slow education of mankind through the influences of coöperative art; that is, the art of the theater in its full social scope."

Thus in the working out of the story Prospero represents "the art of Shakespeare in its universal scope," and Caliban, "that passionate child-curious part of us all (whether as individuals or races), grovelling close to his aboriginal origins, yet groping up and staggering—with almost rhythmic falls and backslidings—toward that serener plane of pity and love, reason and disciplined will, where Miranda and Prospero commune with Ariel and his spirits."

The first view one has of the opening scenes, after buglers stationed in various sections of stadium announce the beginning of the play, is that of Ariel held fast in the jaws of Setebos, god of primeval force, and crying out with right good will for release. Caliban, with shape of ape and voice of bull—being impersonated by Lionel Braham, who has that kind of voice and stands something like 6 feet 5 inches with nary sock on foot—brutishly twits Ariel of his imprisonment and the limitations it imposes on ambition.

Comes Miranda then, and Caliban, growing something too familiar, she calls upon Prospero, who begins the demonstrations of his art by releasing Ariel and entrusting to him the task of educating Caliban that he may know a lady when he meets one. Follows the introduction of the interludes, in which the community players take part—Egyptian, Greek, and Roman scenes first, later a Germanic episode, and finally one picturing Elizabethan England with 400 villages dancing on the green in celebration of May day and the coming of spring—this the high light of the masque as entertainment and a wonderfully beautiful sight to behold.

Frequently there is return to the masque proper, and now and then there is performed on an inner stage bits from the Shakespearean plays to help in the enlightenment of Caliban, who gradually straightens his bent back and clears his befuddled mind until he sees Miranda as she is—a thing of beauty and a joy to be embraced in the epilogue and loved loyally forever after.

The Shakespearean excerpts go for little, however, save as beautiful pictures seen in the distance, for the voices of the actors fail to carry and mingle in a blah-blah that is more ludicrous than impressive. A special musical setting, composed by Arthur Farwell, and effectively rendered by hidden choir and orchestra, adds much to the evening.

Now the community spirit is in evidence in greater degree than it ever has been in any previous civic undertaking, so the main object of the masque is accomplished. It seems entirely reasonable to believe the fact may dawn upon the 1,500 folks taking part that, being forced to live together, they may as well learn to work and play together for the benefit of themselves, their children, and their city.

Sir Herbert Tree sees the end of his Shakespearean festival in sight. He revived "The Merry Wives of Windsor" last week, but just about the time he discovered the elaborate makeup he wears as Falstaff was an impossible covering for these first warm days of summer he also concluded the Hackett revival of the same comedy a month ago had killed interest in it. Therefore he has announced the closing of his season at the end of the week.

NEWS of the THEATERS

Lawrance D'Orsay resigned from the Actors' Equality society when 1,300 or more of his fellow members voted in favor of affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. Henry Miller and Eddie Foy also voted against the proposition. Those who voted for it explain that they desire labor unionism not for the purpose of regulating wages, but as a means to getting a uniform contract, pay for extra matinées, full pay for holy week, and the week before Christmas, as well as a guarantee of at least a two weeks' run for a play after four weeks' rehearsing.

Miss Irene Fenwick, denied the chief part in the Hattons' "The Squab Farm" by their selection of Miss Lola Fisher, is to have for herself a piece called "Common Little Thing!" Willard Mack is writing it.

Raymond Hitchcock is going to remain in London for a revival of "The Beauty Shop." His English manager, desiring to send his present vehicle, "Mr. Manhattan," on a tour of the provinces, has cabled to the United States for a comedian who looks like Mr. Hitchcock to play the latter's part.

Miss Margaret Anglin is to go next season under the management of the corporation which carries on the enterprises of the late Charles Frohman. Her announcement states that she will have a new comedy for "regular" use, and that, besides, she will be permitted to do "special things" afternoons.

Thomas W. Ross and Maclyn Arbuckle are to be co-stars next season.

Paris is said to be going freely to the theaters, but is seeing little that is new. "The Belle of New York," "The Little Café," "Zaza" (with Rejane), "Madame X," "The Surprises of Divorce," and the melodrama we know as "The Bells," were on view there in May.

A burlesque on "Othello" is to be included in "The Follies of 1916."

Although his "Macbeth" film has not yet been exhibited, Sir Herbert Tree is going to spend the summer in the California cinema camps. He plans to tour the United States next season, giving "King Henry VIII.," "The Merchant of Venice," and "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

English variety performers are doing their best to keep American players out of London just now. They say that American competition is especially unfair in wartime.

The Williams-Corey-Riter incorporation, manager of Mrs. Fiske, John Barrymore, and Miss Peggy O'Neil, is, it is said, soon to be dissolved. Mrs. Fiske and Mr. Barrymore will pass to the personal management of John D. Williams, who has placed John Drew also under contract. Among the new plays acquired by Mr. Williams is one called "All Wool," by Hugh Herbert, an actor of Yiddish dialect parts in the varieties.

Miss Nora Bayes plans to appear in a songless play of English manufacture.

Miss Bessie Wynn, remembered as Little Boy Blue in the Grand Opera house run of "Babes in Toyland," is singing in the London music halls with indifferent success.

A combination of "recitals" by Miss Annette Kellermann and Nijinsky is planned under the former's management. One of Miss Kellermann's notions is that, when dry, she can both sing and dance.

Whitford Kane, who was so good in "Hobson's Choice," is to revive Harold Brighouse's "Lonesome-Like" for vaudeville. He acted in it in 1913 at the Fine Arts theater.

Mabel Garrison

Miss Garrison is to appear in "Lucia," the initial bill of the season of opera at Ravinia, Saturday evening, July 1. Orville Harrold and Henri Scott will be in the cast, and Mlle. Rosina Galli and her company will give a program of dancing.

The Friars' Frolic.

The New York club of men connected directly and collaterally with the business of the theater called The Friars will this afternoon and evening give performances in the Auditorium. Their frolic, as they call their entertainment, is brought hither for the same reason that, now and again, the Lambs' club comes to us—to raise money to be spent in Town, which is the histrions' term of endearment for New York. However, The Friars, like the Lambs, come in a frankly mercantile spirit, asking nothing of Chicago because they are The Friars, but making a proposition to trade an uncommon show for the price of a seat. They were here just five years ago, and then made an excellent impression with their lively and varied entertainment.

Now, as then, they were led by George M Cohan and William Collier, neither of whom has been an entertainer here for the last three years. Mr. Cohan since last The Friars were in Chicago, has become their abbot, or president, as well as their patron saint. He and Mr. Collier, though not particularly friendly, will be seen in a comic sketch. Another episode in the bill is called "The Bold, Brave Black and Tans," and is Mr. Cohan's fling at the border-raiding Mexicans.

The most popular of the season's jesters who visited Chicago, Frank Tinney, will contribute. So, also, will two elder brothers in cork, Lew Dockstader and George Primrose. Louis Mann, Andrew Mack, Julius Tannen Laddie Cliff, Felix Adler, George Sidney, and Hap Ward are other well known names in the long roster. A "first part" in the manner of the old time minstrels will involve the ensemble. Albert Spalding, the violinist, and Irving Berlin, the minstrel, are exemplars of contrasted tastes in music who will be heard.

The Friars will parade when they arrive this morning and will, before they go away tomorrow morning, banquet with the Woodland Bards and The Strollers, Chicago organizations.

Playbills of the Week

Colonial—"Treasure Island," a play made by Jules Eckert Goodman and Charles Hopkins from the bully Stevenson yarn. It has been through a long New York City run in Mr. Hopkins' Punch and Judy theater. He and Mrs. Hopkins [Violet Vivian] are of a cast which includes H. Cooper Cliffe, Tim Murphy, Oswald Yorke, and Miss Alice Belmore. First time tomorrow night.

Princess—"Nothing But the Truth," a farce by James Montgomery from a tale by Frederick Isham. Grant Mitchell heads the cast. The play had its first Chicago performance Friday evening.

Garrick—"Omar the Tentmaker," with Guy Bates Post. Second week.

Grand Oppera house—"33 Washington Square," with the diverting Miss May Irwin. Fourth week.

Palace Music hall—"A World of Pleasure," with Clifton Crawford. Fourth week.

Illinois—"Chin-Chin." Final week.

Olympic—"So Long, Letty!" Seventeenth week.

Powers'—"Mavourneen," with Miss Peggy O'Neil. Third week.

Cort—"A Pair of Queens." Sixth week.

Chicago—"Experience." Second week of return engagement.

McVicker's—Continuous variety, including the Chaplin film entitled "Police!"

Great Northern—Continuous variety.

Majestic—Miss Stella Mayhew, with Billee Taylor, will be the chief contributor to the new bill, starting tomorrow. Others will be Miss Gertie Vanderbilt and George Moore, dancers; Franklin Ardell "and company," in a sketch; Bert Fitzgibbon, a popular jester; and Ed Morton, a ragtime singer.

Three Best Sellers in Music.

The three best sellers in Edison records for the last week were:

"Wake Up, America!" and "Played by a Military Band."
"Mother Machree" and "My Wild Irish Rose."
"Hezekiah" and "Virginia Reel."

The Columbia records that had the best sale were:

"Robin Adair" and "Just a-Wearyin' for You."
"Wake Up, America!" and "Good-By, Good Luck, God Bless You."
"The Butterfly" and "Humoresque."

The following were the best sellers in Victor records:

"My Dreamy China Lady" and "There's a Quaker Down in Quaker Town."
"I Can Dance with Everybody but My Wife" and "Yaaka Hula Hickey Dula."
"Morning, Noon, and Night in Vienna Overture, Part 1," and "Morning, Noon, and Night in Vienna Overture, Part 2."

The three best sellers in player piano rolls were:

"Babes in the Wood."
"My Dreamy China Lady."
"Ragtime Pipes of Pan."

The best selling sheet music numbers for the week were:

"Babes in the Wood."
"Pretty Baby."
"The Ragtime Pipe of Pan."

in OMAR THE TENTMAKER
By RICHARD WALTON TULLY, Author of "The Bird of Paradise."
"FASCINATES AND THRILLS. 'Omar the Tentmaker' is enjoyable and stirring all the time; spectacular and speedy. Mr. Tully has made a strangely thrilling story. Mr. Post does superb acting of a school which is rapidly becoming extinct. He is picturesque and atmospheric, and gives an enthralling exposition of fine, spirited character. His 'Omar' is memorable. The production is amazingly resplendent and accurate. Its picturesqueness and expert perfection of movement make it quite marvelous."—AMY LESLIE in the News.

Pslams of Life

by J. P. McEvoy

A BRIEF FOR THE BURG.

I have speared rhapsodic stanzas on the savor of the soil,
And edulcorated epics on the sanctity of toil;
I've perused poetic spasms on the lowing of the kine
And the apostolic blessing of the fig tree and the vine—
O, the apostrophic verses and the pleonastic prose
That's been written on the usufruct of pastoral repose!
But I never saw it thusly when I fought the noble fight,
When I manicured the meadows, when I paged the pigs at night.

I've been told the peace of pastures is an item past compare,
But I never could envisage it while I was working there!
It has been asseverated in my presence round the Loop
That the quiddity of pleasure is an evening on the stoop
After bugging countless taters and intrenching miles of corn,
Stopping only for cadenzas on the luscious dinner horn.
Well, an evening on the stoop may be debauch enough for some,
But I tried them in profusion, and I found them pretty rum.

I have built the stake and rider, I have spread the fertiliz',
I have hauled pea hay and clover; O, my brother, I am wise!
And I tell you poetasters, I am hep to country stuff,
And your lambent lines are looney and your taradiddle guff.
O, the farm is not Hy Brazil, not the Island of the Blest,
Where the wicked cease from troublin' and the weary are at rest.
I have sampled its contentment—in the city now I browse—
I have manicured the meadows and massaged the milk from cows!

They Laugh at this in Vaudeville

MAJESTIC.

Kirk and Fogarty:

"Who sent me this bunch of flowers?"

"A gentleman in the audience."

"How did you know he was a gentleman?"

"He had a white shirt on."

"Well, it's certainly nice to be revived by these flowers; I've been unconscious all week."

"Is it possible?"

"Yes; I was in St. Louis."

"Well, you ought to be getting work. You ought to be ashamed of yourself. Why, when Washington was your age he was a surveyor!"

"Well, when Washington was your age he was dead.'

* * *

"I just happened to think——"

"I thought I heard something rattle."

* * *

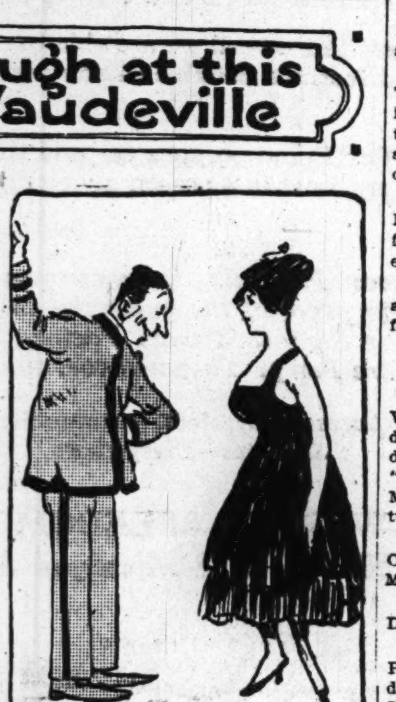
"The other day I was standing in the kitchen of a house when a little mouse jumped out of the gas range."

"Well, what did you do?"

"I didn't do anything, although I had a gun."

"You had a gun? Then why didn't you shoot him?"

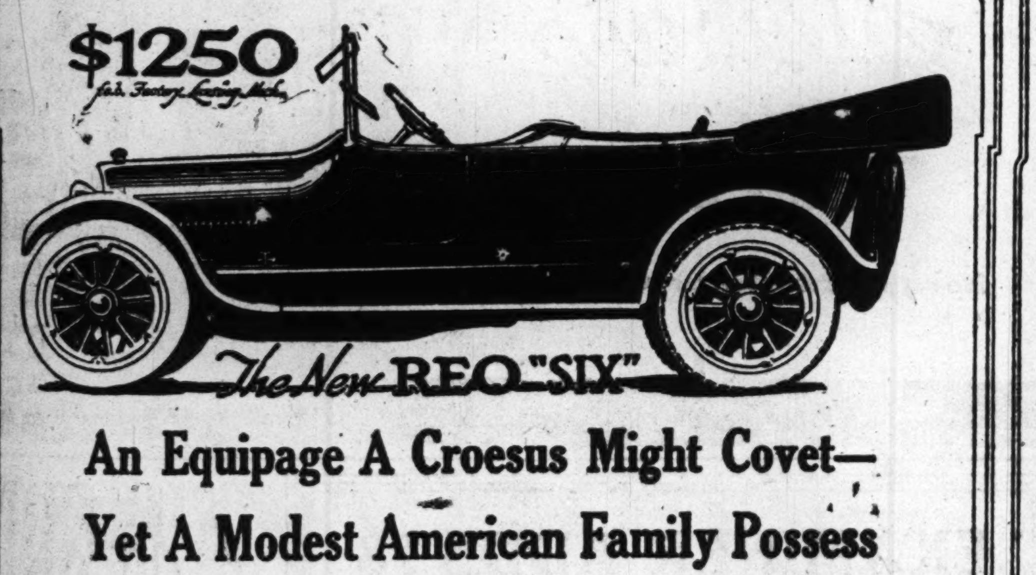
"I couldn't; he was out of my range."



"Where are you going?"

"Whose affair is that?"

"I just wanted to know, that's all. I couldn't tell from your dress whether it was to the opera or an operation.



An Equipage A Croesus Might Covet—
Yet A Modest American Family Possess

¶ Here is a motor car, of such inherent excellence, both as to external beauty and mechanical quality, that the richest man in the world might well be proud of its possession. ¶ Yet, thanks to the marvelous achievements of science in our day and the matchless efficiency of the Reo organization and plants, this magnificent equipage is, in price and maintenance cost, well within the reach of tens of thousands who, in their most extravagant moments, never dreamed of anything so splendid. ¶ Mentally compare, if you can, this sweet-running, silent, beautiful thing with the best that could have been bought only three or four years ago, and you will marvel at the strides that have been made since then. ¶ We Reo Folk contend that one whose experience has been limited to other cars can have but a hazy conception of what we mean when we speak of Reo quality. ¶ Take this Six for example: one must drive it himself to appreciate its many points of superiority. ¶ Do that—you can drive this Reo Six if you have ever driven any automobile—and it will be a revelation to you. ¶ You will appreciate thereafter why this Reo has by common consent, been called "The Gold Standard of Values" in six-cylinder automobiles.

THEY COST A QUARTER.

IF you want your favorite's picture—25 cents, please! Charles Ray, the Ince star, has joined the increasing number of artists who make a charge of 25 cents to cover the cost of photographs sent to their admirers. "I'm not a tightwad," says Mr. Ray, "but I cannot afford to spend the money it costs me to be continually having pictures taken to send away, without demanding some trifling contribution."

Word comes from the Mutual company that $175,000 in royalties had been paid to release the new Mutual-Chaplin comedies in Australia.

* * *

The inspired publicity department for Edwin August is starting a campaign to boost him for president of the United States. "Free silence," they say, will be the keynote of the campaign. They say further: "Grant said, 'Let us have peace.' Sherman said, 'War is hell.' August says, 'Let us have free silence. Censorship is hell.'" H'ray! H'ray!

Billie Burke says that all she does to keep her hair shiny and fluffy and beautiful is to wash it when it is dirty and treat it to a sunning every time she has a chance.

Helen Holmes and her company of Signal players has gone to the orient to take scenes for "The Diamond Runner," an original photoplay by J. P. McGowan, who is the husband of Miss Holmes.

* * *

Our own Alice Joyce has cast her lot with the Vitagraph company. Both company and star are to be congratulated. The first picture in which she will appear will be "The Battle Cry of War." It is said to be a sequel to "The Battle Cry of Peace."

* * *

The Theater club of New York, a society organization composed of those interested in the drama, etc., recently entertained Fannie Ward, who has left the "legitimate" for Lasky, as she passed through town.

The former manager of J. Warren Kerrigan, J. Van Cartnell, is suing his former employer for $2,706.23 alleged to be due for services. Mr. Van Cartnell states that he acted as manager from July, 1912, until January, 1916, and practically "made" Mr. Kerrigan.

FEATURE FILMS OF THE WEEK

"Bobbie of the Ballet"—Five part Bluebird drama, featuring Jean Hathaway and an all star cast.

"Carew and Son"—Three reel Vitagraph drama. Mary Maurice is the magnet here.

"Fate's Boomerang"—Brady-World Film drama, in which Molly King is featured. Here's the combination: Man, girl, railroad job—"perfect ending."

"Flames of Vengeance"—Three reel Mutual production, starring Iva Shepard and Gertrude Robinson. A woman makes a mistake on her wedding day and thereby hangs this tale.

"Her Husband's Wife"—Ivan drama, featuring Sally Crute. Said to be "original."

"Our People"—Essanay production, with Bryant Washburn and Gertrude Glover playing the leads. A starving young reporter wins the love of a banker's daughter. Three guesses as to what the answer will be.

"Shadows"—Knickerbocker star feature, presenting Frank Mayo and Lillian West. Vurr' well done.

"Soul Mates"—American picturization of the drama by Edward A. Kaufman. William Russell is starred.

"The Evil Thereof"—Five reel Famous Players, with Frank Losee starred. One of those morality pictures.

"The Market of Vain Desire"—Triangle production with H. B. Warner in the lead. The story has to do with the question as to whether or not a girl should consider matrimony for the sake of a title.

"The Scarlet Woman"—Five act Metro drama, in which Mme. Petrova is featured. The name is description enough.

"The Trail of the Thief"—Three act American drama, featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen.

Stationary Photoplays.

Castle—Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, "Pasquale," Oliver Morosco drama featuring George Beban. Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," Lasky drama. Mae Murray and Tom Foreman are featured.

Fine Arts—"The Whirl of Life," Cort Film production, featuring Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle.

La Salle—"The Little Girl Next Door" Essanay drama.

Strand—"Cousin Jim," Casino Club Players production; "An Innocent Magdalene," Triangle production featuring Lillian Gish.

Studebaker—Fifth episode of "Gloria's Romance," George Kleine serial, starring Billy Burke and Henry Kolker; "La Vie de Boheme," Brady-World Film production; "Police," Essanay comedy feauring Charlie Chaplin.

Ziegfeld—"The Bondman," Fox picturization of Hall Caine's drama. William Farnum and Dorothy Bernard are featured.

Willard STORAGE BATTERY

It Makes Your Motor Whiz

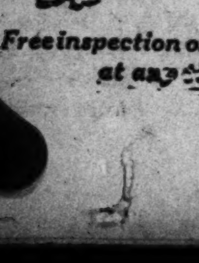
If you've ever tried to spin a motor by hand you appreciate what a real job it is.

And it's hard enough for even a fully charged battery.

So it is up to you to keep your battery fully charged, and to use your starter only when necessary.

Ask us to tell you how to make your battery last a long time and give dependable results at all times. Willard Service is worth your acquaintance, regardless of what battery you use.

Willard Storage Battery Co.
2524-34 S. Wabash Ave.



Says Little Ampere: You can't go wrong if your battery's a Willard—if it isn't, you might.

Free inspection of any battery at any time.

The Cold Cash Side of the Six

We build 1000 automobiles a day.

No other maker of Sixes builds half that many.

In this business quantity makes quality—and the price.

That is why in the Overland Six you get considerably more; you get it considerably better, and what is paramount you get it for considerably less.

Luxury and Economy

Pumping your tires by hand is a slave's job and an extravagance

—a slave's job because it is hot, back-breaking, hand-blistering work

—an extravagance because your tired back always convinces you that you should quit pumping long before your tires have enough air and underinflation spells death to your tires long before they have given you the mileage you paid for.

With a Stewart Tire Pump on your car you will always keep your tires properly inflated and get their real built-in mileage because all you have to do is to sit cooly by a few minutes while your Stewart and your automobile engine do the work.

The Stewart Tire Pump has set a new standard in simplicity and price.

Because of the quantities we sell we are able to offer a tire pump with all the built-in quality and features possible in any pump—at the revolutionary price of $12.

Install a Stewart Tire Pump on your car and the savings it will effect in your tire expense will pay for it in a season giving you a permanent luxury at no cost.

You can accept Stewart Products on any car you are considering buying as safe, understandable proof of the quality of the car as a whole. Insist on a Stewart Warning Signal, Stewart Vacuum System, Stewart Speedometer and Stewart Tire Pump. They will cost you nothing extra.

POSITION OF THE STARS AT 9 O'CLOCK TONIGHT, SHOWING ALTAIR

ALTAIR.

In June Altair, the bright star of the constellation Aquila, the eagle, begins to rise as the sun sets. It may be found about 80 degrees from the pole star on a line drawn south halfway between Deneb and Vega.

Inasmuch as the most persisting pleasure the ordinary, casual observer of the heavens will find will be in the identification of the stars, it is possible that directions for finding them cannot be over repeated.

Vega, then, is found by drawing a line from the star which joins the bowl and handle of the Big Dipper to the pole star and then at right angles, on the side the handle projects, for a distance of 40 degrees. Remember the measuring stick. The two stars in the outer line of the bowl of the Dipper are 5 degrees apart. That will enable you to measure off distances in the sky.

Deneb, which arises about an hour after Vega, is about 45 degrees from the pole star and with Vega and the pole star forms a right angle triangle. The line by which Altair is found passes between Vega and Deneb. The three stars, Altair, Deneb, and Vega, form a triangle with Altair in the apex to the south.

Vega is a forerunner of spring, Altair of summer. Altair is only fourteen light years distant. Of the first magnitude stars only Sirius and Procion are nearer. It approaches the solar system at the rate of more than 800,000,000 miles a year. Our sun is speeding on towards Vega.

About 10 degrees northeast of Altair is a group of four small stars, in diamond shape, known as "Job's Coffin." Forming a line with Altair are two stars, which help to identify it, Altair being the brightest, in the center of the line. The star above Altair is Tarazed, the one below Alshain. The line they form is the "Shaft of Altair."

About 8 degrees below Altair, in the Eagle, is a noteworthy variable, known as Eta, which changes every seven days, four hours, fourteen minutes, and four seconds, going from a third and a half to a fourth and a half magnitude in that period.

Altair gives out about ten times as much light as our sun. The constellation Aquila represents an eagle flying easterly across the Milky Way and usually is joined with the figure of Antinous, the two constellations being regarded as one.

About 5 degrees east of Altair is the radiant point of the meteors known as the Aquilids, which are visible from early in June until August. Meteors come in swarms from definite parts of the sky and the point from which a shower springs is called its radiant. The various swarms derive their names from the constellations in which their radiants are found. The Aquila swarm is not a famous one like the Leonids or Perseids, being one of the minor showers into which the earth seems to run.

Eight more coats of finish than any car of its price class, many more bearings and bushings, an oiling system requiring but two grease cups—these and ninety-seven other points, some exclusive and the remainder the accepted standard, are the features claimed for the "Hundred Point Six," a new car just announced by the Kissel Motor Car company of Hartford, Wis. In place of the usual twenty to twenty-five grease cups found in the average chassis, Kissel has substituted oil bolts. Each of these bolts contains an ample reservoir, which may be filled from a can in the ordinary way. The carburetor automatically supplies the right mixture at all speeds, giving gas economy as well as efficiency. Low fuel consumption is also promoted through casting of the intake manifold inside of the cylinders and also by the vacuum feed system.

Not alone those directly interested in motor haulage but the general public as well is invited to attend the motor truck exposition at the showrooms of the James Motor company, 1503 South Michigan avenue, during the ten days, June 5 to June 15. Visitors will be surprised to note the recent advances in motor truck construction, and at regular intervals during each day and evening lectures on truck construction will be delivered by a representative of the factory. The exposition is a novelty in Chicago.

To J. G. Conderman of Chicago goes the distinction of being the first globe trotter to make use of a coupé in extended travels. Accompanied by his wife, Mr. Conderman is now on the last lap of a tour through the United States that has lasted almost continually for a year and a half. On Aug. 14, 1914, Mr. and Mrs. Conderman left Chicago for Washington, D. C., and their tour ended at Bangor. From this point, by easy stages, they returned to Chicago, completing a trip of 9,992 miles. Last June, with a complete camping outfit packed in the car, they started for the western coast. They traveled by way of Omaha and Yellowstone Park to Butte, Mont., and then to Spokane and Seattle, and from there to San Francisco. They are making the return trip to Chicago over the southern highways.

Dramatis Personae of the Speed Spectacle.

No. 8—RALPH DE PALMA, MERCEDES.

HAD his father had his way Ralph de Palma, who will drive his first and only 1916 speedway race at Chicago on Saturday, probably would be a barber today instead of internationally famous as a monarch of velocity. Lathering faces and stropping razors was not speedy enough for the Italian, however, and he lacked the conversational powers which jokesmiths associate with tonsorial artists, so eighteen years ago he left the shsop to which his father apprenticed him to pursue fame with the aid of gasoline.

De Palma hails from Italy, being born in Troia thirty-three years ago. At the age of 9 he came to America with his parents and became a resident of Brooklyn, where he first learned the rules of the road by dodging baby buggies.

Like Barney Oldfield and several other automobile drivers, De Palma made his first bid for newspaper publicity as a bicycle rider, starring as an amateur in 1898 and turning professional in 1902, when he scored his most notable victory on a wheel in a twelve hour race at Rochester.

The following season he switched his allegiance to a motorcycle and campaigned a gas bike on the eastern tracks for four years before he secured a position as mechanic in the automobile plant of the Allen-Kingston company, which was building a team of cars for the 1907 Briarcliff road race.

It was in this event that De Palma made his debut as driver. He was originally listed to ride as mechanician with Al Campbell, but in practice the car crashed into a stone wall and the driver sustained a broken leg. De Palma, despite his inexperience, was selected as a substitute pilot and was running in seventh place on the fourth lap of the eight lap event when the Allen-Kingston left the road, and, turning turtle, landed in a ditch of water, with De Palma underneath.

After participating in dirt track events with the Allen-Kingston the remainder of that season, De Palma fell heir to the Fiat Ciclone, in which Cedrino was killed, the following year, and defeating Oldfield, Robertson, Christy, and other stars in match races, was awarded the American Automobile association dirt track championship. He also finished ninth in the Savannah grand prize and received a diamond studded medal for turning the three fastest laps.

In 1909 De Palma captured his first road race, winning one of the class events in the Riverhead stock chassis meet and establishing an American nonstop record by covering 227.5 miles at an average of 62.4 miles per hour without a halt of any kind. Trailing George Robertson by only forty-eight seconds, he lost the Lowell road race on the last lap when a cylinder gave way. His other achievements that season were the winning of the A. A. A. dirt track title and a world's record drive at Daytona, where he averaged 76.77 miles per hour for 120 miles on the Florida sands.

For a third successive time De Palma was awarded the A. A. A. dirt track championship in 1910. His only road race start was in the grand prize. He was leading the field by two minutes on the last lap of this classic when the cylinders of the Fiat blew out and relegated its driver to the also-ran oubliette.

After losing the Indianapolis race in the most pathetic finish in the annals of the sport and going to Europe to drive a Fiat in the French Grand Prix, De Palma was awarded the American road racing championship in 1912 by virtue of his victories in the Elgin national and free for all contests at Elgin, the Vanderbilt cup classic at Milwaukee, and the light car event at Santa Monica. He was at the wheel of the famous Schroeder Mercedes in these races and also in the grand prize, in which he turned over and escaped death by a miracle in an attempt to pass Caleb Bragg, the winner, on the last lap.

As captain of the Mercer team, De Palma scored but one first in 1913, winning the C. A. C. cup at Elgin. He busted up at Indianapolis and finished outside the money in the Elgin trophy event and the Corona grand prize.

De Palma again won the American road racing championship in 1914 when he annexed the Vanderbilt cup, the Elgin trophy and the C. A. C. cup and finished fourth in both the grand prize and the Corona race. He also drove an English Vauxhall in the French Grand Prix.

Last season was not a highly successful one for De Palma, although he won the Indianapolis race and hung up a course record of 89.84 miles per hour for the five centuries. On the next to the last lap of the Hoosier classic his Mercedes suffered a punctured crankcase and repeated attempts to repair it were futile, the car showing a sudden reversal of form at Elgin and the Twin Cities.

During the last winter De Palma has rebuilt the Mercedes, and believes that in its maiden 1916 start here on Saturday the German thoroughbred of steel will show its former speed and stamina.

Please advise me through your department as to the best way to reach Mooseheart by automobile. Is Mooseheart the place where some sort of an educational institute is located? L. E. A., Chicago.

Mooseheart, a vocational educational institute conducted by the Loyal Order of Moose, is located at Mooseheart, Ill. The school is attended by 171 boys and 89 girls, and is an interesting place to visit. The distance from Chicago by road is thirty-seven and one-half miles. There are two or three good routes to Mooseheart. Perhaps the most popular one is out Washington boulevard to the western limits of Oak Park, through Forest Park, Maywood, western limits of Bellwood, and across Salt creek. Shortly after crossing the creek turn straight west on to cement road and continue for about thirteen miles, passing through the southern edge of Wheaton to a point about two miles west of the town. At four corners go straight ahead if the weather is fine, if rainy jog right one-quarter mile and then west one and one-half miles to crossing of Du Page river at Gary's mills. West of bridge turn left and follow to bridge, crossing west branch of river. Make "S" turn and through cross roads, continuing west as before. Enter Batavia in Wilson avenue and continue west across river to Lincoln highway. At end of road take highway to left one and one-half miles to entrance of Mooseheart. On return trip you might go south into Aurora on Lincoln highway and then take Starved Rock trail to Chicago.

Please publish the best route to Menominee, Mich. I expect to make the trip early in June. Would the road be in good condition at that time?

F. A. Johnson, Chicago.

The most direct route is through Evanston, Highland Park, Waukegan, Kenosha, Racine, Milwaukee, 90.5 miles; Sheboygan, Manitowoc, Green Bay, 121.8 miles; Big Suamico, Little Suamico, Brookside, Peshtigo, Marinette, Menominee, 60.1 miles. The condition of country roads always depends upon the weather. Under ordinary conditions the roads to Marinette should be found good. In rainy weather you would encounter considerable mud, especially around the Suamicos and Peshtigo.

Will you please publish the best route for a bicycle trip from Chicago to Crystal Lake, Ill., together with the distance and the condition of the roads?

S. D. Pedler, Chicago.

The best and most direct route is through Oak Park, Maywood, Elk Grove, and Algonquin, a distance of fifty-two miles. The road consists mostly of good gravel.

Will you kindly print a map showing the best road from Chicago to Michigan City? Edward Redding, Chicago.

We regret that we are unable to give space in this issue for the map you ask for, but will be pleased to publish it in a future issue. The route is easily followed. Go south in Michigan boulevard, east in Garfield boulevard through Washington park, and over the Midway through Jackson park. Pass South Shore Country club and curve right into South Shore boulevard. Continue to South Chicago and across river, taking Ewing avenue to Indianapolis avenue, where turn left to Sheffield avenue and follow trolley to point where line leaves to right. Keep straight ahead in Calumet avenue, following causeway across Lake George into Hammond. Then go through East Chicago, Calumet, Gary, Miller station, Porter, and Furnaceville station to Michigan City, 62.5 miles.

I wish to make an automobile trip from Marion, Ind., to Charlevoix, Mich., via Elkhart, Ind. Will you kindly lay out the best route for me?

J. S. C., Marion, Ind.

First go through Sweetser to Mier, where you will strike the Indianapolis-Goshen route. Then pass through Mount Vernon, Wabash, North Manchester, North Webster, Syracuse, and Goshen, which is eighty miles from Mier. Continue through Dunlap to Elkhart, 10.2 miles. From Elkhart go through Bristol, Mottville, White Pigeon, Three Rivers, Moorepark, Portage, Kalamazoo, 57.1 miles; Plainwell, Bradley, Wayland, Moline, Cutlerville, Grand Rapids, 48.6 miles; Rockford, Sand Lake, Howard City, Stanwood, Big Rapids, Reed City, Le Roy, Cadillac, 108.5 miles; Manton, Sherman, Buckley, Traverse City, 53.8 miles; Acme, Elk Rapids, Kewadin, Torch Lake, and Eastport to Charlevoix, 53.2 miles.

Big High Speed

I read your article in last Sunday's paper on "Where Shall We Drive Today?" and was much interested in it. However, since you secured your route data a few changes have been made in Elgin, and I desire to set you and your readers right. I refer to the route you gave to Lake Geneva and return. For your information I would state that the electric tower at the end of Villa street was removed recently, and consequently this will no longer serve as a landmark for motorists.

I note also that you route the automobilists down National street to Grove avenue and up Grove avenue to the square. Grove avenue from National street to the square has been in abominable condition, especially on the right side of the road, and it is avoided by all Elgin automobilists. The favorite route at the present time is: At the top of the hill, instead of keeping straight on down National street, turn first road to the right, into Channing street; continue to the end of the cemetery fence on the right; turn left into Du Page street to the high school building on the right, here turn one block to the right, into Chicago street [brick paving, street car tracks], turn left on Chicago down into the square. Villa street is being torn up, preliminary to paving, and it is likely it will be in bad condition for several months. It might be advisable to direct automobilists coming to Elgin to turn right at Ontarioville, just before coming to the Milwaukee tracks; then in about a block follow the road, turn to left, crossing the tracks to first four corners, turn left, which brings you into Chicago street road, straight into Elgin and down to the square at Chicago street and Grove avenue.

A. H. Rittenhouse.

How are the roads?

GENERALLY poor roads, with considerable detouring necessary in order to get around sections where repairing is being done and where bridges are out, are reported by Blue Book Scouts sent out during the week. Most of the investigations were made the middle of the week and the weather since then may have changed the condition of certain roads.

According to the reports, tourists going from Chicago to Lake Geneva may encounter several stretches of bad roads. It has been found that the route via Milwaukee avenue and Diamond lake is not yet good between Half Day and McHenry. Route conditions as reported follow:

ILLINOIS.

Chicago-Lake Geneva—Route via Wauconda is still bad between Wheeling and McHenry.

Springfield-Quincy—Route via Virginia, Beardstown, and Rushville has improved. The ferry crossing the Illinois river is good. There are no bad places, although recent rains may cause trouble.

Quincy-Galesburg—Route via Macomb and Bushnell is rough but may be traveled, although recent rains must be taken into consideration.

INDIANA.

Terre Haute-Indianapolis—The route via the Old National road should be avoided on account of bridges out near Plainfield and Bridgeport, with bad detours. All travel should go via Rockville.

Terre Haute-Vincennes—Route via Sullivan is open for travel. A bridge is out at Sullivan and another is out near Evansville, but the detours are short and good.

IOWA.

Iowa City reports that on the river to river road from Davenport to Des Moines a new concrete bridge is being built over the Iowa river, but the detour is only a few city blocks. Recent rains have roughened the Red Ball, C., K. O. and G., and Red Cross routes, but a day or two of good weather should put them in shape.

MICHIGAN.

Bay City-Alpena—Route via East Michigan pike, bridge over Pine river, north of Van Etten lake, is out; detour over road by the Carl E. Schmidt farm. Between Oscoda and Tawas City road is fairly good, but sticky in wet weather; road is being graveled. Standish to Pinconning, road is rough. All other bridges which have been washed out are now replaced by good temporary structures.

WISCONSIN.

Lake Geneva reports all roads good for a radius of twenty-five miles.

MISSOURI.

Chillicothe—It is reported that all routes are being dragged and repaired where possible, but on the route to Kansas City via Excelsior Springs and Liberty the Grand river has flooded the road between Chillicothe and Utica.

Hannibal—This section reports all roads about the same as last week, although some of the routes may be found a trifle rough. Approaches to the bridge across the Mississippi river at Hannibal are under water. Ferry service until 6 p. m.

Hannibal-Keokuk route via Palmyra and Canton—Road on west side of river is under water. Those going from Keokuk to Wayland are advised to detour via Francisville.

More Than 70% Preferred

OWNERS of better grade cars now appreciate that the Twelve was not a change brought about for sale impetus, but was the ultimate and basically correct answer to all multi-cylinder problems.

The Single Four and Single Six are all very well and fine for small cars—but for the larger cars, where discriminating owners demand greater flexibility and comfort, the V type motor was inevitable. Actual sales figures prove it.

By leaps and bounds the good news spread across the country until today the demand is universal because the Twelve is the best thing on wheels. Of all the better grade cars (over $1700) sold this year, more than 70% are of the multiple cylinder (V motor) type.

National Twelves are in daily service in every State in the Union.

These National Highway Twelve owners will tell you that they never thought it would be possible for such marked improvement to be made.

They bought "Highway" Twelves, solely on the strength of the National name—when you buy your Twelve, you get not only this guarantee of one of the oldest, most reliable, most successful factories, but in addition you may know that National Twelves are rendering service, pride and pleasure to many of the most discriminating motorists.

National designed and builds its own Twelve-cylinder motors. Soon, motor or parts makers will be turning out twelve-cylinder engines by the tens of thousands, engines patterned after the Twelve pioneers.

Eventually you won't think of anything but the Twelve—but why wait? Why not have the most up-to-date and most efficient car today?

Get acquainted with the National Highway Twelve. You're cheating yourself every day you put it off. It is America's best looking car.

Anyone would. The greatest argument for Fruitvale IS FRUITVALE.

A Million Flowers Are A-Bloom—Come and Pick Them!

The woods and fields and orchards are ablaze with blossoms everywhere. The air is like heady wine, the sky like crystal. Every bush and tree is a-twitter with myriads of song birds. Fruitvale holds out its hands to you. Come to it. It will be a day of delight. You'll find our beautiful hotel ready for you. Come and eat a Fruitvale Chicken Dinner. Only millionaires can afford them in Chicago, everybody can afford them at Fruitvale.

Come and see all we have done to make Fruitvale ideal as a home community, as a place where people can live and enjoy life. Come and see how the people already at Fruitvale are enjoying themselves and how THEY ARE MAKING GOOD.

They will tell you how they have made a five or ten-acre tract pay them a fine living and a good income besides. Fruit, orchards, vegetables and, above all, chickens and eggs are the big money-makers at Fruitvale. Come and see what others are doing—What you can do.

Come and See How We Guard You Against Failure

Fruitvale Home Garden Tracts are NOT AN EXPERIMENT. We have done all EXPERIMENTING. We have safeguarded Fruitvale people in every way. We have spent tens of thousands of dollars to do this. Our Chicken Hatchery cost $30,000. Our experimental farm fully as much. We plant your tract with the trees, the fruit bushes, the berries, plants and vegetables that bring the biggest returns. We stock your yard with chickens that have swept all prizes before them and that bring big prices on the Chicago market. And here is the biggest thing of all:

WE BUY EVERYTHING YOU RAISE RIGHT IN FRUITVALE as soon as it is raised and we PAY CASH for it. You don't have to worry about finding a market for your produce. We take it off your hands IMMEDIATELY AT THE BEST PRICES. And your money is waiting for you.

All these things have been often promised before by other land colonizers, BUT WE DIDN'T PROMISE THEM — WE DID THEM. They are there now. Come and see them.

Ten acres at Fruitvale, properly worked under the guidance of our experts, will keep you far better than most people live in Chicago and pay you a good income besides.

The Money You Waste Day by Day Will Safeguard Your Old Age

Don't forget that the pay-check to which you are chained today will not last forever. The day MUST come when you'll have to give way to some younger, more aggressive, more energetic worker. What are you going to do when that happens? How are you going to live? How long are the few dollars you have saved up going to stand between you and starvation, want, suffering? You don't want to become a charge on your children, your relatives or your friends, do you? Here is a way to protect that old age, that day when you'll lose out on the payroll. Think it over seriously. A few dollars a month—what you waste now—will pay for a Fruitvale tract.

Plan Your Vacation at Fruitvale Have a Great Time—Save Money

While you are thinking about Fruitvale, why don't you decide to enjoy your vacation at Fruitvale this summer and have a real, old-time vacation? Live indoors or in the woods, enjoy boating, bathing, fishing, eat all you can hold of the finest home-cooked food, chickens, eggs, real cream; clean, fresh beds, all new, every convenience and lots of good companions, and all for $13.75 for the week, including board, lodging, steamer fare from Chicago and back to Chicago, use of boats at Fruitvale, etc. Think of it, a week with everything paid for, $13.75; two weeks for $23.75. Send for our vacation offer and booklet.

Send for Our FRUITVALE Book—It Is FREE

We have prepared a very beautiful illustrated booklet about Fruitvale. It is the simple story, told without any frills, of how Fruitvale originated, how it was developed and how people are making good at Fruitvale. You will enjoy reading it and it is free. We will mail it to you if you will write in. You can use the attached coupon for convenience. Or, come into our offices and see our moving pictures of Fruitvale. They will interest you. DENBY TRUCKS

FOR TRAIL OR PAVEMENT

Chicago's Most Up-to-Date Truck Exposition Awaits Your Approval

1½-TON

A Golden Opportunity for 20 Chicago Business Men Who Act

Twenty of these wonderful 1½-ton Denby trucks is all that the factory would allow us at this time. That's more than our share, but the minute we had a chance to see and study this Type G Denby we realized that here was a truck that a thousand Chicago concerns have been waiting for. The famous Denby drive, of course; the Denby engineering and manufacturing efficiency at their utmost; a big-bodied truck that will carry the load anywhere, carry it 365 days a year if necessary—and do it on a low fuel allowance that will surprise you.

A wonderful truck; a wonderful price, and a wonderful opportunity for twenty progressive Chicago concerns to get right delivery at the right price.

This 1½-ton model represents so remarkable a value that if it were unknown to fame it would be a big seller. Backed by Denby name and Denby reputation, you know what will happen.

So come in or send your purchasing agent as soon as you can—we'll have to make a rule of "first come, first served." For we almost had to storm the factory to get these twenty—and you won't want to wait.

WE'RE going to keep open house until June 15 to prove to the doubters, the skeptical—to every one interested in motor haulage in Chicago—that the four Denby models—1 ton and 2½ tons in capacity—set new standards of both quality and price in the motor-truck field.

A representative of the factory Engineering Department will be with us to show you the "why" of Denby construction, from the smallest bolt to the marvelous Denby internal-gear drive. And we'll put the trucks themselves to any test you say—the harder the better.

Bert H. James

No matter whether or not you're going to buy a truck in the immediate future, come and learn what remarkable advances in efficiency and in serviceability the last year or so have made possible—how close to an absolutely perfect commercial vehicle is manufactured today.

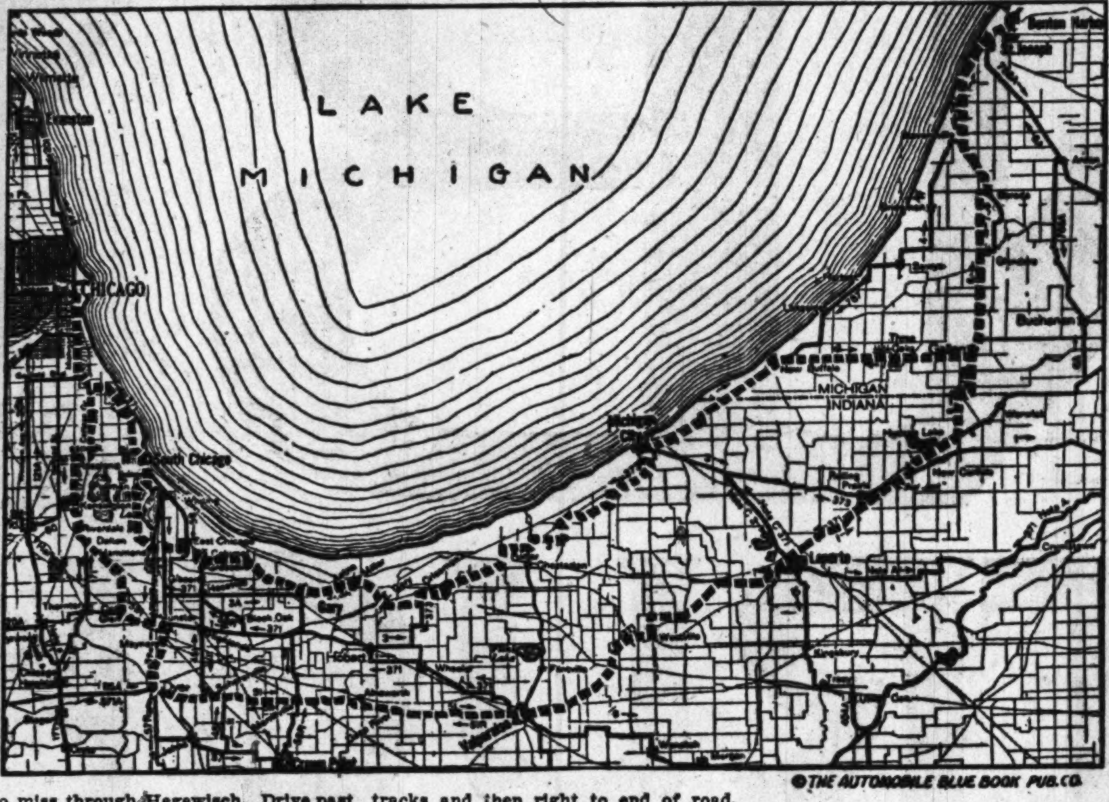
WHERE SHALL WE DRIVE TODAY?

CHICAGO TO ST. JOSEPH, MICH.

Furnished by the Automobile Blue Book Touring Bureau.



©THE AUTOMOBILE BLUE BOOK PUB.CO.

THE more we know of motoring conditions in the Chicago territory the more convniced we are of the scarcity of really attractive objective points within a radius of 100 miles. However, there are two or three old standbys that continue to hold a prominent place in the hearts of all motorists who have visited them on local trips for the last few years.

One of the most prominent is St. Joseph, with its various clubs and resorts; also Benton Harbor, and those who have not attempted the trip in the last six months will be pleased to learn that for the first time there are practically hard road conditions all the way, with a great deal of new improvement going in on other routes that will add a great deal to the attractiveness of this trip in another year.

Last year two or three short stretches of macadam were completed by fall, making it possible to go to St. Joseph without either plowing through the mud or having to get out and push through the deep sand. The shortest possible routing is by way of Gary, Michigan City, New Buffalo, and Galien. The shore road from New Buffalo to Stevensville is slightly shorter than this, but a great deal of it is closed this summer for improvement. As noted on the accompanying map, other combinations of routes can easily be made out to connect with this routing at Galien with fully as good road conditions but slightly increased mileage.

As the former and shortest route is less known to most of the motorists, this will be outlined in more or less detail, although it follows Blue Book routes 3 and 4 respectively. Leaving Chicago, go south in Michigan avenue, following the boulevard system through Washington park, Midway, and Jackson park, out South Shore boulevard, through South Chicago, into Ewing avenue.

After passing under the Lake Shore and Pennsylvania tracks in Ewing avenue, it is advisable for a short time to avoid Indianapolis avenue, but go into Hammond by way of the Hegewisch route. This goes ahead in Ewing avenue to One Hundred and Sixth street, then west to Green Bay avenue, and south with one or two jogs, but direct and almost impossible to miss through Hegewisch. Drive past Burnham station into the north edge of Hammond, here, instead of going into Hammond, keep east through East Chicago and Calumet, coming into Gary in Fifth avenue.

Keep straight ahead out of Gary in Fifth avenue, crossing railroad at Ætna to Miller, slight jog to the left, cross Lake from here on for a mile use special caution, for there are two particularly bad railroad crossings winding through sand dunes.

At end of road in East Gary turn left, keeping on main macadam road, which bears slightly to the north in one or two spots to four corners about three miles beyond East Gary; here turn left a little over half a mile, then right through south edge of Crissman for a mile and one-half to four corners with woods on left. Turn left across Michigan Central tracks and then right to end of road, just southeast of Porter; turn left away from Michigan Central tracks for two miles, then right two miles to end of road, where turn left half a mile and then right; from here on road is sign posted and about the only macadam road you can follow direct into Michigan City.

Leaving Michigan City, go one block north of Michigan street to Second street, where turn right; follow Second street straight out of town in a northeasterly direction along the line of the Pere Marquette railroad, passing Grand Beach and coming into New Buffalo on hard road all the way. To reach the new macadam going out of New Buffalo strangers probably will find it easiest to jog left here toward center of town one block, then right cross small ravine and turn right again; curving left to street just beyond, follow direct road, coming on to new macadam at Pere Marquette railroad crossing.

Go straight east on this macadam through Three Oaks to four corners, twelve and one-half miles beyond New Buffalo and one-half mile south of Galien; here turn left and go straight through Galien. There are a few miles north of Galien that are not improved, but it's a sort of gravelly material that will not be at all bad except in exceedingly bad weather.

Keep ahead straight north on direct road for ten miles beyond Galien. Here turn right with macadam, follow main travel with one or two jogs, but impossible to miss to Baroda. At business center turn left and go straight north on macadam again through Stevensville, passing through some pretty orchard country, and just south of St. Joseph coming along bluffs above Lake Michigan, with many beautiful summer homes, entering St. Joseph on State street, 108 miles from Chicago.

If an early start has been made this is an easy run in five hours, and a return can be made the same day, although it is best for a two day trip, with all afternoon and the next morning around St. Joseph.

Returning, it is advisable under present conditions either to follow the outgoing route, or, as shown on the map, come down through Baroda and Galien, where, instead of turning east to New Buffalo, keep ahead south past Hudson Lake, picking up the South Bend route at what is known as Bootjack; here follow the well known route to Laporte through Valparaiso back into Chicago.

A Timely Warning

ELEVEN well-known automobiles have advanced in price within the last ninety days.

The Maxwell Company has not increased their prices—yet We do not know what their plans are, but we do know and you know that materials entering into the construction of good automobiles now cost from 20 to 300 per cent more than they did six months ago.

Nothing is to be gained by delay. Much may be lost.

Not only may you lose several dollars in the purchase price, but you are sacrificing the enjoyment, the relaxation, the health-giving properties—everything, in fact, that makes motoring the favorite pastime of the nation.

We urge you to come in and investigate the Maxwell.

Or, we will refer you to any number of Maxwell owners and let them tell you their own story in their own way

They will tell you what they have told us. That the Maxwell is good-looking—that it is powerful—that it is comfortable—that it is economical—in short, that it is the best investment they ever made. They will tell you more and they will tell you gladly and freely.

That's the way they feel toward us and the Maxwell Car.

Whatever you do, don't put this off We have a few cars on hand and can take orders for immediate or future delivery—at present prices. If you can't come in today, phone us for a Maxwell demonstration.

By J. C. Burton.

As the preparedness tornado has swept over the United States, gaining more force with each attack on hyphenated citizenship by Theodore Roosevelt and with each diplomatic conference on the Mexican border, the highways of the country have taken on new importance.

A year ago the roads were thought of only as arteries of prosperity, offering to the farmer an opportunity to haul his grain to market and to the motorist a chance to chase his shadow over the landscape and explore the neglected but unsurpassed wonders of America.

Then came talk of war, the interchange of notes between Germany and the United States, and the sending of a punitive expedition into Mexico to capture Pancho Villa, and the nation first realized that highways were a military asset, almost as vital a factor as a large standing army, trained citizen-soldiers, and modern equipment.

For the automobile is now the carrier of Mars. No longer does the war god ride to battle astride a sweat lathered charger. Gasoline furnishes the motive power. The motor car has made possible the rapid mobilization of troops. With the army mule displaced by the motor truck, supplies and ammunition are carried to the front at a speed undreamed of by the military geniuses of a half century ago.

And the automobile, to reach its highest efficiency, must have good roads over which to travel. Europe had such highways at the outbreak of the colossal conflict now raging across the Atlantic. At the height of his power Napoleon had laid the foundation for them in France. Germany, apotheosis of military efficiency, had thoroughfares the equal of any in President Poincaré's republic.

It was these improved highways that made possible the invasion of Belgium by the gray hordes of the kaiser. Good roads were an invaluable aid to France in the mobilization of her troops, a motorized mobilization that probably saved Paris from capture in the late summer of 1914.

The United States, however, can boast of no such national highways as France and Germany had at the beginning of the European war, roads that once were famous for their smoothness and hard surface, but which now have been made almost impassable by the convoys of military motor trucks that have been driven over them. The macadam has been torn by the shells of giant guns.

In America we have been talking about improved highways for the last ten years and have made some advancement in the construction of new roads and the improvement of old thoroughfares, but never before in the history of this country has there been such an altruistic and common good reason advanced for the building of arteries of travel as that of the national defense advocates.

Linking good roads with military preparedness has not been without fruit. It has started the people to thinking. In the past good roads have been fought by thousands of narrow minded citizens, who held to the erroneous belief that the improvement of the highways was only for the benefit of the motorists. They now realize, or should realize, that good roads are a military asset.

It was the military preparedness talk more than any other argument advanced, that resulted in the passage of national funds for road construction legislation by both the senate and house of representatives. Only last week Senator Tom Taggart of Indiana introduced a bill calling for an appropriation to finance the immediate construction of the Lincoln and Dixie highways by the federal government.

Headed by Coleman Du Pont and Charles Henry Davis, the National Highways association has prepared a map showing the tentative routes of 100,000 miles of roads that connect all the important cities and towns in the United States, and in the event of war would serve as arteries of military transport.

This map is the expression of one of the main ideas of the association, that trunk line roads are the first requisite—through routes leading from somewhere to somewhere—and that the feeder roads must naturally follow the development and improvement of these main lines. The theory is like that on which the great railroad systems of the country were built.

It is estimated that more than 5,000,000,000 tons of freight per annum pass over all the highways of this country, with an average haul of a little under ten miles. The average cost is about 28 cents a ton mile, while on good roads this cost would not exceed 8 cents a ton mile. This means a saving on our highways of $7,500,000,000 a year—enough to build fifteen Panama canals or 1,500 dreadnaughts. It would build all of the 250,000 miles of railroad in the United States in a period of three years. It represents one-quarter of the entire annual wealth produced by this great nation.

The total value of farm real estate and buildings in this country is over $40,000,000,000. If only the present 2,000,000 miles of highways were to be improved, these land values would be increased at least one-quarter over their present values, or an increase of $1,500 for every farm.

There are in operation in the United States about 2,000,000 automobiles. If the average daily mileage of these cars is taken as twenty-five miles each, the total would be more than 15,000,000,000 miles a year. With operating expenses at, say, 15 cents a mile, this means an annual expenditure of more than $2,000,000. The association believes that bad roads are responsible for more than 10 per cent of the running cost of motor cars, but even at 10 per cent good roads would mean a yearly saving of more than $200,000,000.

In a pamphlet on this project Gen. Du Pont says:

> In comparison with the figures of saving the cost of roads seems insignificant, and when you consider that if highways, national and state, are built under the plan of the association the cost will not only soon be repaid but that the legitimate income will repay the cost of the road and will in a few years bring in an income to the nation or state that will be greater than its tariff has ever been, and that in a few more the income will be sufficient to take off many if not all of the taxes of today, and this income will be constantly on the increase, so that in many states it will equal the entire amount of taxes within less than a century, this plan should be most carefully studied.

In the preparation of its map of the nation's strategic highways, the National Highways association has included the most important of the transcontinental automobile routes which are being constructed and improved under the direction of permanent organizations—the Dixie highway, the Lincoln highway, the National Parks highway, the National Old Trails, the Borderland road, the Midland trail, the Pike's Peak Ocean to Ocean highway, Jackson highway, Jefferson highway, Meridan road, and the Washington to Atlanta highway.

The possibilities of motor cars as aids in the quick mobilization of troops on improved roads have just been demonstrated in army maneuvers held at Utica, N. Y. As a result an automobile battalion of twenty cars will be formed to serve as an adjunct to the United States troops stationed at that city.

Sixteen Studebaker cars were chosen for the maneuvers, which included dashes of twenty-two miles up and down the Mohawk valley. Two large manufacturing plants, one at Utica and the other at Ilion, were chosen as the strategic points, and in "covering" them company B of the First infantry set a record for speed and efficiency, the motor cars getting the soldiers to these points at a hitherto impossible speed.

The remarkable work of the automobiles in the "skirmishes" is all the more noteworthy, the use of the cars on this occasion being a forerunner to further efforts along the same line in other army maneuvers at various camps.

It required less than forty-five minutes to rush an entire infantry company from the Mohawk valley. The demonstration was the most spectacular and unusual in the history of the national guard, the work of the motor cars being the feature that attracted most comment.

Using 1,200 rounds of blank ammunition, the troopers gained a theoretical victory over an imaginary enemy, the speed made possible by the automobiles being one of the deciding factors.

While army maneuvers on a large scale have been held on several occasions, this "battle" was the first in which motor cars played so important a part. The cars were given a mark of perfect mechanical efficiency. A repair wagon which accompanied the fleet was called upon only once, and that was for changing a tire. All the machines used were seven passenger touring cars, but carried on the average of eleven soldiers apiece, two being stationed on each running board in addition to the seven in the cars.

"Another ten years will see national road systems covering every section of the country, the greatest practical step in the direction of preparedness that could be made," comments Dr. H. M. Rowe, the newly elected president of the American Automobile association, from the Washington headquarters.

"In a decade we will begin to have separate roads for freight traffic and passenger traffic," predicts Dr. Rowe, "and the horse and mule will have practically disappeared. Our present highways will be greatly multiplied and largely increased in width and improved in quality. No other country on the face of the earth can make such good and profitable use of good roads as the United States of America. We will eventually excel in that as we do in many other things. There have been wonderful changes in all matters relating to transportation since the introduction of the motor car, but there are still greater things to come."

Gossip of the Auto Trade

Under the eye of ordnance department officers the Hendee Manufacturing company of Springfield, Mass., builder of the Indian motorcycle, has been working since last fall on a suitable carriage which would mount a machine gun. It has now perfected a type which is being put through field trials. With a crew of two men on the machine it will make forty miles an hour. With the Indian combination the gun carriage can be detached from the motorcycle in thirty seconds and wheeled into firing position.

Earl G. Gunn, chief engineer of the Premier Motor corporation, says: "Look out for sensational improvements in motor car building. Engineers know that there are still some stubborn problems to be solved—the problem of fuel economy is an example in point. The average seven passenger touring car must be made to give thirty miles to the gallon of gasoline or we must find a substitute fuel that shall be half as expensive."

An old two cylinder Haynes car belonging to L. O. Robertson of Dallas, Tex., has a history that would do credit to a crusader. There is no way of telling how far it has run, since it has never had a speedometer on it. In placing his agencies Mr. Robertson, a district insurance agent, has forded rivers with the car, crossed mountain ranges, hunted antelopes on the plains on the eastern border of New Mexico, and pulled the fifty mile stretch of sand dunes from Cap Rock on the east of the Staked plains below Amarillo to Clarendon in Donley county.

La Azora "Monarch" 10¢ "La Azora Bismark" La Azora "Agreement" 5¢ straight

Listen Men!!

We don't ask you to buy 'em

SEE here, Men, your time's valuable. So's ours. We have a straight business message for business men. So we'll not mince words.

For twenty years we've been making "better quality" goods for men who know a good cigar when they smoke it. The La Azora brand needs no introduction to any one.

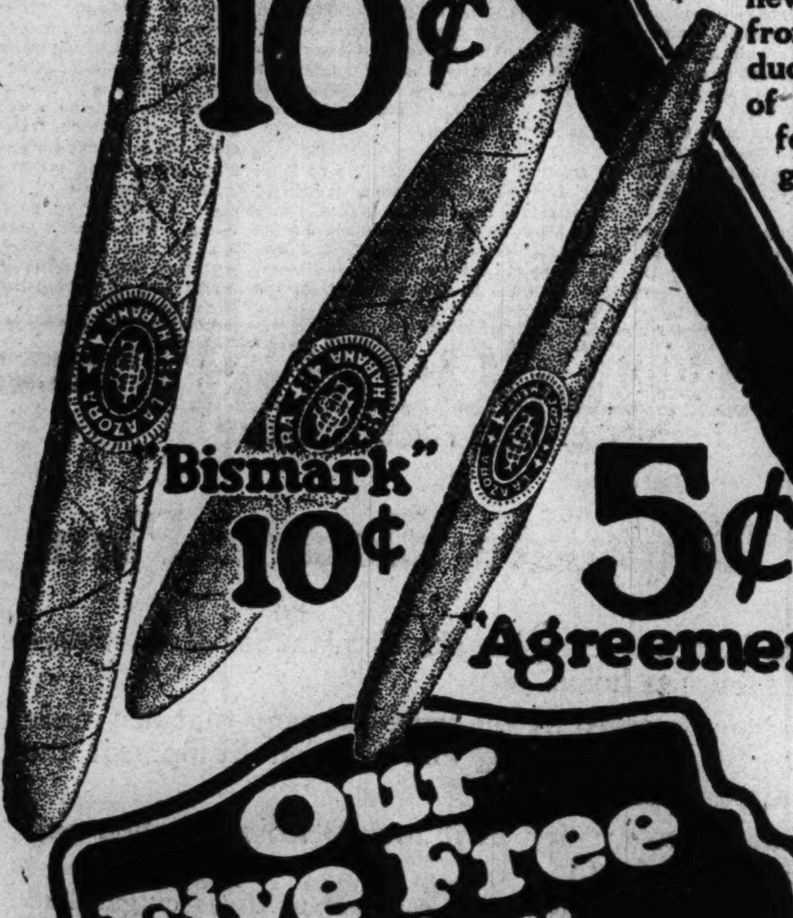
Now we've hit on an entirely new blend. Absolutely different from anything we've ever produced. Made it into three cigars of different shapes—Breva, Perfecto and Panetela. So almighty good that we've made them our "leaders." Sort of a de luxe edition of a popular volume. Now you know and we know that it's absolutely impossible to describe the flavor, fragrance or aroma of a super-quality cigar. Nothing "mellow" or "nut-like" about it. Likewise you know that poetical names of blends are nothing but conversation—mere drivel. If a manufacturer has any confidence in his goods he'll back them to the limit. Until he makes a straight out and out guarantee he has no right to expect your confidence. Well, sir, these are the only cigars that have ever been unqualifiedly guaranteed—a money refund guarantee.

Candidly, we don't believe there has ever been a cigar that could begin to compare with these. But we don't expect you to accept that statement merely on our "say-so." We're so almighty positive that these cigars knock the spots clear off anything selling at anywhere near the price that we're going to prove it at our risk.

TRY FIVE AT OUR EXPENSE

UNLESS YOU ARE PLEASED AND SATISFIED

La Azora "Monarch" 10¢



"Bismark" 10¢

5¢ "Agreement"

La Azora

Try five! If you don't agree with our statements we buy back the bands at the full price of the cigars.

That's the basis on which these cigars are sold.

Our Five Free Offer

Go to the nearest cigar dealer and buy FIVE La Azora Cigars—"Bismark," "Monarch," or "Agreement." Smoke them all.

Then if you are not entirely satisfied, tell us the reason, return the five bands to La Azora Factory, 222 Forest Ave. E., Detroit, and we will remit your cash in full for the five cigars.

This offer expires July 15. It can be accepted only once by any smoker. Remember, the bands are to be sent to the La Azora factory—not to the dealer.

It's a bold offer to make to the thousands of readers of this paper. For we stand to lose a fortune if we fail to completely win them. It takes an extraordinary cigar to back it up.

You're the judge. You take no risk. You can't lose a penny. If these cigars are all we claim for them you've discovered a rare treat and an extra big value. If they're not, the smokes are on us.

Step up to the nearest cigar case. Call for your favorite shape in the La Azora.

If your preference runs to Brevas ask for the La Azora "MONARCH"—a straight, easy draft, extra large mild smoke; price 10c.

If you fancy Perfectos, get the La Azora "BISMARK," full size, extra value ten center.

Or, perhaps you will favor the La Azora "AGREEMENT," a panetela strictly hand-made, long filler—ten-cent quality at 5c straight. Mildest cigar in the world.

But, remember, the price is 10c and 5c straight. For these are the costliest cigars in the dealer's case at those prices.

INSTRUCTION.

DO YOU STAMMER, STUTTER, LISP?

Or have you any speech imperfection?

We absolutely guarantee to permanently correct them and do it in shortest possible time or NO PAY. Our system is simple and efficient. Write Institute, 1118-19 Transportation Bldg., Chicago.

WHY ARE YOU NOT A CELEBRATED SINGER OR A SUCCESSFUL PUBLIC SPEAKER?

Because the one pair of muscles which, like the mainspring in a watch, control the vocal organ are too weak, they must be strengthened. This is the latest discovery in vocal anatomy, which solves all difficulties of voice building forever. At little cost you can now develop your voice at home. A series of written lessons will teach you how. The University of Chicago and many educators and singers indorse this discovery. Write for free booklet. Perfect Voice Institute, Chicago. 4328 N. Lincoln-st.

ORATORY, GESTURE, POISE, SPEECHES, voice power, convincing conversation; taught effective style, for speaking to crowds, clubs, juries; timidity turned to courage. Lectures, club papers, speeches, toasts written to order. Oxford Studios, 22 Auditorium Bldg., 2d floor.

SUMMER SCHOOL, DRAWING, MATHEmatics, etc. Ask about our free scholarship plan. Day and eve. classes. Send for catalog.

Salesmen, Solicitors, Etc.

A CORPORATION WITH A HEART.

In the beginning let it be understood that this is no philanthropic or charitable organization. A concern of national reputation manufacturing an article of recognized merit, who employ large numbers of men, are now making arrangements to increase their force in the Sales Department.

We want men of undeveloped sales ability, who have failed to make a success in the business world through lack of opportunity, or who realize they are failures due to lack of aggressiveness—men of good appearance, members of good families, who are determined to make good and who are willing to concentrate their time and attention to attain a place in the sun. Men with latent ability who under our supervision and encouragement can be developed into representative business men commanding large returns.

If you are the kind of human material we desire and if you possess these qualifications and are sincere, write for interview.

Address M H 226, Tribune.

ADVERTISING SOLICITOR — EXPERIenced. Well known Chicago Advertising Agency has opening for experienced solicitor in agency line. Do not want beginner or man who merely thinks he can make good. Want man who has made good and is making good. Splendid opportunity for excellent connection for right kind of solicitor. State age and experience. Address M J 196, Tribune.

WANTED—MALE HELP.

Salesmen, Solicitors, Etc.

RESPONSIBLE SPECIALTY SALESMEN, ATTENTION.

A sales force of 150 men is being organized and at least 50 salesmen will be in the field by June 12th. We would prefer to have as many more by that date as possible.

This enterprise is not entirely new, but is a startling improvement upon past endeavors along similar lines. We are spending approximately $50,000 in the production end of this business for each $1,000 heretofore spent by competition. The result is a specialty which sells to practically every prospect as soon as he understands what it is.

The proposition will pay any salesman worthy of the name $100 a week from the start. It is possible for the right man, as he develops, to make more than twice this amount. It is simply up to the ability and industry of the salesman. The most territory any salesman can handle on this proposition is fifty or sixty towns. This includes towns of 1,000 population as well as the biggest cities, and every town in the territory must be handled. For instance, at least six men will be working in the state of Illinois, each of whom will have exclusive territory.

We prefer men who are living right in the territory they are working. Then they can travel five days a week and be home every Saturday and Sunday if they like, and part of the time they can be home every night.

We are the sole owners of the entire business and we will cover the entire United States.

This opportunity will particularly appeal to the salesman who is particular about the merit of the article he sells; to the salesman who is a big money maker at the specialty game, but who is tired of looking for a new proposition every few months and who is weary of the nerve racking, high speed and high tension salesmanship required to sell the usual specialty of uncertain merit—the specialty which the purchaser later on often wishes he had not bought.

It will especially appeal to the man who has unquestioned sales ability and industry, yet is only making two or three thousand dollars a year, and hesitates to make a change to the average specialty proposition, where only a small percentage of the men who attempt to sell such propositions succeed; it will appeal to such men because it has all the certainty of a salary every week. It will also appeal to the man who spends weeks or months in working up a proposition on which may net him a nice commission or may fall flat and leave him broke, or at least disgusted and disheartened.

This proposition is a one-thousand per cent improvement over anything ever offered along the same lines and it is one of the greatest factors in commercial life as it exists today. This is not an insurance, "house-to-house," office-to-office, premium or trading stamp game, but in every town your prospects are invariably the best, biggest, and most progressive business men. In fact, you have a list of prospects in each town, far more live than the usual leads secured through advertising.

The repeat orders are the most attractive part of this business. With the new business you will secure, your earnings should be 50% greater the second time you cover your territory, and should increase largely each additional time. Every order secured will pay you full remuneration every renewal—permanently—and it will be necessary to cover your entire territory every three months. You get full commission on all business whether it comes in through you or by mail.

We will only consider responsible, successful, thoroughly experienced salesmen. We are not looking for the man who "can sell anything" [usually down and out], or the man who is so clever he only has to work half of the time, or the man who never thinks one line is good enough but must always have a side line. But we do want the type of man who can hold a good salaried position, who is willing to work for us in practically the same way and make a sure, steady, permanent income, which will net him two to four times as much.

The one requirement that we ask above all others of the man who replies to this advertisement is that he be able to recognize a good proposition when he has it presented to him properly. We don't want the salesman who is "Going to give it a whirl," or a try-out—but we do want the man who has initiative enough to know what he wants and to recognize the chance he has been waiting for when he meets it.

To the salesman residing outside of Chicago, who is interested in this proposition, we recommend that he come to Chicago and see us immediately, provided he has the requirements set forth above.

This proposition is soundly financed and our salesmen will carry indorsements from national authorities and bank references of the highest character. The merit of this proposition, the enormous field, and the people behind it means that it is sure to develop into one of the greatest selling propositions of the age. Every salesman knows what getting in on the ground floor with this kind of organization means. It give him every opportunity for advancement to the fullest extent of his capabilities.

We will be glad to answer wires or letters with regard to territory, but we will not promise to hold territory any longer than when the right man to handle it applies. We will pay no attention whatever to simple requests that we explain our proposition. Tell us fully about yourself and we will reply promptly with full information if your application meets with our approval.

We have several salesmen already secured, but there is plenty of territory in each state still open. In most states there is no territory arranged for whatever.

Apply at once.

You won't be kept waiting for an interview.

THE BUNGALOWS IN AUSTIN

Built by E. Hogenson & Co. are really in a class by themselves; 5 to 8 room bungalows are now being erected on Latrobe and Laramie-avs. and may be had ready for occupancy or built from your own plans in brick, stucco, or California redwood on lots 33 1-3 or 40 feet wide.

Look at the beautiful completed residence streets there; Lorel and Lockwood-avs., having strict residence restrictions, paved streets, well kept shade trees and hedges and no unsightly vacant lots.

It is the cheapest in the end to buy a well built home in a locality where property is steadily advancing.

A booklet mailed you on request.
Office, 5312 W. Chicago-av.

Michigan.

James J. Hill

[Private car excursions Tuesdays, June 6 and 20.]

THE EMPIRE BUILDER, the late James J. Hill, showed us, as did no other man, the relations of agriculture to our national prosperity. Here are some things he said: "Men are being wasted in the city who are wanted in the country." "The soil is the ultimate employer of all industry and the greatest source of all wealth." "The great merit of modern scientific agriculture is its extreme simplicity."

IN CHICAGO'S PREPAREDNESS PARADE yesterday there marched thousands of men who will be unprepared for readjustment of employment and loss of their jobs when peace comes and Europe ceases to buy from our factories, and at which time we will witness an unprecedented rush to the remaining available farm lands.

THE APPROACHING NECESSITY of turning to the lands, is it not your present opportunity? Look into the matter. Get our literature without delay. Learn how we are co-operating with customers and settlers in building up an agricultural community in the Swigart Tract of Manistee, Mason, Lake and Wexford counties. See for yourself that this is a place where you can enjoy pleasant living while engaging in profitable farming. Our literature gives all statistics in regard to different branches of farming in these counties and all information necessary to help you to decide on the next step of going to inspect the lands.

NO PLACE IN MICHIGAN is developing more rapidly than our district, which has the advantage of being centrally located in the Fruit Belt on the western side of the southern peninsula, where Lake Michigan moderates the climate. Those who saw this country five years ago and are seeing it again this season are surprised at the great number of new section line roads that have been constructed, the many farms that have been cleared, and the many homes that have been built. The lands are located handy to towns and good shipping points, for either lake or rail transportation to nearby big markets. The local markets are good, and the lands are being settled by a good class of farmers. The prices of the lands are advancing each season from the improvements that are being made. Prices now range from $10 to $25 per acre, and much of the best lying land at $18 to $20 per acre, on terms as low as $10 to $50 down and $5 to $10 per month on 40 acres. We have an insurance feature in our contract that costs you nothing extra because of our large number of customers. Ask about this. Also ask about our privilege of exchange feature in connection with your selection of land from over 50,000 acres.

THERE IS A DECIDED ADVANTAGE for those who act now on this proposition, which we will explain to you upon application. Drop a postal for our literature or call for it at our offices, where you will find our stereopticon show, consisting of nearly 200 views taken from our lands, and also an exhibit of the crops of our townships, consisting of wheat, rye, oats, barley, vetch, clover, alfalfa, vegetables, and especially fruits. All of these crops are raised on a profitable basis in our district, which is also well adapted for cattle, sheep and hogs. There is no better place for poultry.

OUR CROPS ARE DOING FINE, and right now is an excellent time to go and inspect them and see what the farmers are doing and judge for yourself the productivity of the lands. Our next excursion leaves our Chicago offices Tuesday, June 6, at 11:30 a. m., returning to Chicago, Friday at 7 a. m. Special rate for the excursion $12.50, including railroad fare, meals, and lodging. Automobiles and guides free. Offices remain open Monday evening and Saturday afternoon.

FARM PAPER MAN OR MASTER PRINTER

I will be in Chicago early in June and want to talk business with some man who knows something about the printing and stationery business; a man who believes he could make a success of publishing a high class farm paper in the far West. I want to talk to men only who have made good, or who are supremely confident that they can make good, and who will have a few thousand dollars to invest in the proposition if after investigation and actual experience in working with me, it appeals to them. Without going into the situation in detail, I will say that I have an established printing business in the West, which has been going for fourteen years, and is the biggest plant, with the best reputation of any in the state. This end of the business has made money and paid good dividends on the capital invested. I started it on a shoestring, like about everything else in the West, and it has grown so fast that additional capital is needed. For 21 years in connection with our printing plant we have been publishing a farm paper. It has grown up until it has now a healthy circulation of 12,000. I want some man who can take this paper, which stands well with the people and with the advertisers over the country, and make something worth while out of it. If you can make good on either of the propositions I have open and would invest a few thousand dollars in the deal after you have worked with me for three or four months, and satisfied me that you have the punch, and satisfied yourself that I have a proposition that looked good to you, address O 391, Tribune.

INVESTMENT

PHOTOPLATING.

What is it? A basic process in the Arts and Sciences so new that a new name had to be coined for it. It is a new method, or process, of reproducing designs on metal, glass, leather, wood, paper, or any solid surface whatsoever, wherein the design is first photographed on the surface employed and then chemically [not electrically] plated to the design in any metal—gold, silver, aluminum, copper, brass, bronze—or combinations of metals. The plated design is then either burned in, annealed, or baked, and the result is a brilliancy of finish absolutely impossible to obtain through other existing methods.

This wonderful process applies to advertising signs, art novelties, stained glass, transparencies, art and ornamental glass, picture frames and moldings, art tiles, pottery and chips, decorating, leather novelties, wood inlays, jewelers' art craft, and miniatures, plated photographs, and many other uses and adaptations.

We offer you the opportunity to invest on a safe preference basis in our Parent Company, which owns the exclusive rights for the entire world on this Photoplating process. We believe that enormous profits will ultimately accrue to investors. We already have our factory running full capacity, and urgently need more capital for business expansion. The men behind it are sound, capable men of excellent standing. Best of bank and business references furnished investigators. If you want an investment that combines an initial safe 7 pct. with large, even enormous, prospective values and profits in just a few years, then look into this. We give a share of common stock free with each share of preferred cumulative stock. Did you miss getting in on automobile and munitions stocks? Then here is your chance again, right now. Will you take it? Come to our factory salesrooms, 1138-40 Unity Building, 127 N. Dearborn-st., and see the superb line of goods we manufacture. Telephone Central 257.

BUSINESS CHANCES.

AN EXCEPTIONAL

Investment Opportunity.

Legitimate Chicago business enterprise [Illinois corporation] offers for an investment of $5,000 a 100 per cent profit return in 90 days, together with principal.

This is a sound business proposition secured by real estate in one of the best business sections of Chicago, stability and success being assured by the fact that over $200,000 has already been pledged by local banking interests, thus guaranteeing the investment to be conservative in every respect.

The above $5,000 will not be used until the $200,000 already pledged has been paid in.

Address O 465, Tribune.

A POSITION AS SEC. AND TREAS. OF A well known Chicago Co., manufacturing a staple line of children's wheel toys is open to a young man who can invest from five to ten thousand dollars; the salary will be $50 per week to start with; the investment should earn not less than 25%. This is a clean cut, bonafide proposition. If you are interested and can meet the requirements address M E 595, Tribune.

A REBUILT CADILLAC

It's a Safe Used Car to Buy

A rebuilt Cadillac is superior to any new car at the same price. They are the truest values on the street. By rebuilt we mean that the cars have been taken entirely apart, each part examined and, if necessary, replaced by a new part made at the Cadillac factory, the entire car repainted and refinished like new, all equipment put in first class condition—the whole car, in fact, carefully reconstructed until it is good as new in every detail.

We are as interested in the performance of these rebuilt cars as we are in new Cadillacs. In actual service value these cars are worth a great deal more than we ask for them, and we usually have a variety of body styles to select from. See them before you buy.

SKAGWAY, ONCE BUSY CITY, NOW QUIET HAMLET

Gate to Klondike Formerly Noted for Lawlessness; Curio Trade Pushed.

BY FRANK G. CARPENTER.

[Copyright: 1916: By Frank G. Carpenter.]

SKAGWAY.—Eighteen years ago Skagway was one of the most talked of towns in the world. It was the chief gate to the rich gold fields of the Klondike, and miners came by the thousands to tramp over the passes in order that they might get to the headwaters of the Yukon and float down to Dawson.

A little later it became the terminus of the White Pass railway, which runs to White Horse, the head of the navigation of the Yukon, and within a short time it sprang from a village of tents to a bustling city of wood and stone of 15,000 population.

The most of the citizens were transients who were moving back and forth from the gold mines. Then the mines began to play out, and the blood of Skagway grew weak. The miners grew fewer and fewer, and the city dwindled until it now has, all told, only five or six hundred.

Saloons Have Disappeared.

The saloons and dance halls of the past have all disappeared. The hotels and rooming shacks have rotted away and many of the better class houses are vacant. The town has changed from a wide open community of gamblers, fortune hunters, and miners to a staid little settlement which lives on the travelers who pass through on their way to Yukon territory and the interior of Alaska, and on the tourists who come north every season.

As it is now, several hundred steamers call at Skagway every season and they bring thousands of passengers. Many take the continuous round trip, but many also stop off at Skagway for a few days or weeks. The place is fast becoming a summer resort. It has a mild climate with much less rain than other parts of the panhandle. In the immediate vicinity are a half dozen glaciers and not far away is Glacier bay, one of the greatest glacier gardens of the whole world.

Skagway offers no end of excursions which the tourist can make on horseback, on foot, or by motor boat, and he will find new things at every step or at every chug of the engine.

Winters Are Mild.

The interesting things of Alaska are not confined to the rocks, the mountains, the snow, and the ice. As far as this part of the country is concerned, the latter is found only in the glaciers. The winters are such that there is no ice to speak of, and in summer Skagway is of the greenest of green.

Many of the residents have garden patches, where they grow all the vegetables used by the town. I saw one patch of raspberries this morning which had bushes as high as my head and berries as thick as my thumb. I saw rhubarb with leaves as big as two pages of a newspaper and stems that reached to my shoulders.

Going back to my hotel, I saw in one of the store windows two tubs of geraniums with stems as high as a man and with red blossoms twelve inches in circumference.

The Pullen house, where I am staying, is surrounded by several acres of beautiful lawn planted with trees and flowers. A stream of mountain water flows through the lawn.

Two Trails to Gold Fields.

When gold was discovered in the Klondike there were two roads or trails from the head of the Lynn canal over the mountains. One started at Skagway and climbed up through the White pass to Lake Bennett, and then went on down the Yukon to Dawson. The other began at Dyea, which is four miles away, and went over the Chilkoot pass to the Yukon.

At first Dyea had the lead. It built a tram, running on a cable, that carried freight up the pass, although the passengers had to walk, or, as they say here, "mush it" on foot. As the cars rose into the air, upheld by the wire rope, they swung this way and that, and now and then some of the freight was spilled out.

Once the train carried ninety-four hogs. The motion made them dizzy and seasick and half of them jumped from the cars and left large grease spots on the rocks far below.

Another time a woman came along with a parrot. She was told that the bird would be carried and that all she had to do was to hang the cage in the car. She was afraid to risk her dear Polly, and so she took him out and carried him up on her wrist. She sent the cage by the train, and, when she had climbed to the top, found that it was so crushed that it could not be used.

Crowd Rushes to Skagway.

Later the White Pass railway was built and the miners were taken by steam over the mountains. This sounded the death knell of Dyea. The crowd rushed to Skagway, where the new road began. Most of them left their houses without trying to sell them, and some abandoned their furniture, including the china and linen. One family departed, leaving a table half set for dinner.

All were crazy to get to the gold mines and to take part in the prosperity which it was thought Skagway would have. After a short while the town was abandoned. All had left with the exception of a man named Emil Klatt, who took up a homestead on the site of the abandoned city. He ployed the streets and laid out his fields among the town lots. He farmed there for years, and became generally known as the mayor of Dyea, although his only subjects were cattle and sheep.

It is interesting to hear the Skagwayans tell of the days when their town was at the height of its drunken prosperity. It was a wide open community, having sixty-one saloons, each with its dance hall. There were neither courts nor police. At that time there was no law in Alaska under which a municipal government could be organized, and the only representative of Uncle Sam was the deputy marshal.

Criminals Band Together.

The criminal element was combined by Jefferson Smith, who went by the nickname of Soapy. He got the title from having peddled soap wrapped in bank notes on the streets of the towns of Colorado. He would pretend to wrap up the soap in $10 or $20 bills, selling it from boxes, which contained both blanks and prizes, auctioning off the packages. The game is a swindle, well known throughout the west.

Soapy Smith came to Skagway at about the time of the beginning of the war between the United States and Spain. He gathered about 400 of the vicious element of the place and offered them to President McKinley as a band of rough riders, ready to fight the Spaniards. The president, who had been posted as to their character, was obliged to decline them.

Soapy then armed and drilled them and used them to prey upon the community. They robbed strangers, singly and in crowds. They committed a large number of murders, and it was almost sure death to oppose them. The people were afraid of them, honest men were intimidated, and a reign of terror lasted for months. The gang had all sorts of ways of fleecing the miners who passed through on their way to the Klondike, and also of getting the gold of those who came back.

The Skagway of today is an orderly community. It has good schools, waterworks, and sewers, electric lights and telephones, a daily newspaper and several churches. It has a courthouse and a jail.

Reap Profits from Curios.

The chief business of the town seems to be the selling of curios to the tourists. There are a half dozen stores that sell jewelry, carvings, moccasins, and baskets. The jewelry is made by the Indians, being pounded out of silver dollars. The carvings are of walrus tusks cut by the Eskimos, and the moccasins and baskets are manufactured by the natives about Skagway and in other parts of Alaska.

None if these things is cheap. The finest baskets, little ones that will not hold more than a quart, bring from $50 to $100, while cigarette cases of the same character sell for $15 apiece. No basket of fine workmanship can be bought for less than $8 or $10. The best are made under water.

They are of straw woven finer than the finest panama hat; and so delicate and intricate that it takes several months to make a basket as big as the head of a baby. The finest come from the Aleutian islands. They are woven by the older of the Indian women. The art is dying out and it will probably pass away with this generation.

Natives Are Expert Carvers.

Most of the carvings come from Nome and the Indian settlements about the mouth of the Yukon, although some good carvings are cut out by the Indians about Skagway and Sitka. The Indians make their own carving tools, grinding them out of old razor blades, using only the thick part of the razor. In working they pull the instrument toward them, digging out the ivory after the style of the Japanese. This is the direct opposite of the way our carvers work.

These natives of Alaska seem to have a high sense of the artistic. They are imitative, and they can carve any likeness if they have only a model to work by. Among the most common of the curios offered for sale are billikens carved out of walrus ivory. When the first of these figures was brought to Alaska a curio dealer showed one to an Eskimo and asked him to imitate it. He did so well that it could not be told from the original. Since then billikens have been made by the thousands, and they are now a drug in the market.

The Eskimos are beginning to make kewpie dolls in miniature, and at that they are succeeding wonderfully well. I am told that you can have a billiken or a kewpie made of yourself upon order. The Eskimos will take a walrus tusk and cut out the figure, putting a caricature of your own features upon it.

LOST HIS BANK BOOK, THEN HIS DEPOSITS WENT

Man Arrested for Impersonating W. H. Bulin, Egg Buyer for Packing Company, and Obtaining Funds.

W. H. Bulin, egg buyer for Morris & Co., first missed his savings deposit bank book and then his savings deposits. He found that a man had called at the People's Stockyards bank on March 24 with the book and had drawn out $75. The man had returned the next day and taken out $50. A third visit netted him all there was left to the account, $150.07. Mr. Bulin protested. The bank called in the services of the Burns agency. Detectives obtained a clew. Yesterday the hands of Detective Sergeants Rogers and Cahill of the Englewood station descended simultaneously upon the shoulders of Silas Smith of 3426 West Sixty-first street, a former employé of Morris & Co. He will be charged with impersonating an egg buyer.

SEES 'MATTERS' BABY DAUGHTER OF A SOLDIER

Miss "Jessie" Bryan Predicts Future for Infant She Claims.

Miss "Jessie" Bryan changed the future of the "Matters" baby yesterday—to a soldier's daughter.

With Miss Marie Louise Des Rosiers, the nurse from Canada, who holds the secrets of her motherhood, and also others belonging to Mrs. Dollie Ledgerwood Matters, "Jessie" paid another motherly visit to the infant in the Michael Reese hospital yesterday. She wore her pink hat and blue serge suit in which she has made all her public appearances as usual. But on her face was a smile, and she walked with as matronly a step as her 19 years would permit.

Will Call Her "Kathleen."

"I am going to change her name to Kathleen," she said, "Kathleen Pensler Ryan. My brother earns more than a hundred dollars a month, and I $7 a week—quite a plenty for a soldier's daughter.

"For if Wilhelm comes back from the war and wants to marry me—well, I'll never marry any one else. We kept company for five years. But because I 'fell' is no sign that I should give up the religion my mother taught me. Others have sinned as I—and I am trying to do the best I know, now.

"My mother is coming next week to help me through my sorrow here. Then I have such consoling letters that encourage me in wanting my baby. My boss wrote me that my job in the factory is waiting—and that every one there will be kind.

"Why, he wrote in his letter that the whole town would be at the station to meet me when I came home with the baby. And I am never going—unless I take her with me. I'll stay here a hundred thousand years to get my baby.

"When I go back I'll learn to read and write and improve myself for the responsibility of bringing up a soldier's daughter.

Waved a Good-By.

"The baby played with my gold locket around my neck and was so sweet! She waved her little hand 'Good-by' when I left and cried. There is something, I am sure, that she feels to tell her I am her own mother.

"Then, today I received a proposal of marriage, too—a teller in a bank in Chicago, if you please. He wrote that he, too, had had a disastrous love affair, and now that he is 39 years old he would consider it a privilege to support me and Irene.

"The baby, he said, would be a bow of sunshine to join our happiness.

"But just now I'm considering nothing, and love no one but my baby and my mother. Judge Landis is the best judge in the world. He's given me my only joy—since I now can spend three hours a day with my own baby."

BOOST ROADS TO WEST COAST BY LONG DISTANCE AUTO TRIP

National Parks Highway Association Starts Run from Chicago to Seattle.

An automobile trip from Chicago to the coast to boost good roads and the national parks will be made by a party of six which will start at 9 o'clock this morning from the agency of the Mitchell Automobile company, 2334 Michigan boulevard.

The boosters are members and officials of the National Parks Highway association. William G. ("Good Roads") Edens, president of the association, will be one of a number of encouragers who in a score of automobiles, will accompany the boosting party on the first few miles of their trip.

WHEAT PRICES AT LIVERPOOL ARE STEADY TO FIRM

Cargo Market Stronger, with Manitoban Offers Firmer; American Marts Closed.

With all grain markets of this country closed because of Preparedness day, and Winnipeg observing the king's birthday, the trade's attention was turned to Liverpool. Prices for spot wheat there were unchanged, but the cargo market showed firmness, winter wheat being 3d higher per quarter and Manitobas 4½@6d higher. Broomhall cables that the weakness in America was offset by recent reports of the naval battle and firmer Manitoba offers. Unfavorable crop advices also came from Russia, where a cold wave has spread over a wide area and damage to the growing plant is expected. However, the demand for wheat over there is still light, and they expect large world's shipments this week, with a further increase in supplies on passage.

Liverpool spot corn was steady, with parcels about 3d higher. Export offers are reported as lighter. There were scattered showers in Kansas, and the forecast is for further rain in some sections, although weather over most of the state is expected to be clear. Generally, fine weather prevailed over the grain belt.

Crop Promises an Average.

While estimates on the total wheat crop this year appear small in comparison with productions of the last two seasons, they are not out of line with the average yield of the last five years. Bulls claim that with the war on it will be necessary to maintain the mark set by the last two crops, but it must be remembered that we could not dispose of all of our wheat this season, and this carry over will do much toward offsetting crop losses. There is little chance for either Canada or Australia to produce another such phenomenal crop this year as they did last, but both have big surpluses, and the economy practiced in Europe is decreasing consumption of wheat materially below normal marks.

The possibility of peace also must be considered, especially at this time, when conditions favor it more than at any time since war commenced. Russia's surplus is immense, and it would seem that our crop prospects must suffer more damage of a serious character before the bulls can hope to bring up crop comparisons.

Missouri Crop Report.

Missouri crop report for June, as wired by C. A. King & Co., makes condition of wheat 57, compared with 62 in May and 69 a year ago. Yield promises about 15,000,000 bu wheat. Corn condition is given as 84, against 85 a year ago, and 75 last September. Oats condition is 88, against 85 a year ago, with acreage 1,050,000 acres. Clover condition 89, against 88 a year ago, and timothy 86, against 81 a year ago.

GRAIN AND FLOUR PRICES.

COFFEE AND SUGAR.

NEW YORK, June 3.—The market for coffee futures was very quiet today and after opening at a decline of 2 to 5 points prices steadied on a little support from local bulls and scattered covering. The opening decline carried prices into new low ground for the movement, with September selling at 8.50c and December at 8.63c, or about 37 to 39 points under recent high levels. The decline in the Rio market and increasing primary receipts may have been a factor, but the selling was not active enough to suggest fresh sentiment and sales for the day were only 8,500 bags. The close was net 1 point lower to 1 point higher, September having rallied to 8.53c and July to 8.36c; June, 8.31c; July, 8.38c; August, 8.45c; September, 8.54c; October, 8.57c; November, 8.62c; December, 8.66c; January, 8.70c; February, 8.75c; March, 8.79c; April, 8.84c; May, 8.90c. Spot coffee steady; Rio 7s, 9¾c; Santos 4s, 10¾c. No change was reported in the cost and freight market. Early estimates indicate a decrease of about 750,000 bags in the world's visible supply for the month of May. The official cables reported a decline of 150 reis at Rio, but Santos was unchanged and Rio exchange was 1-32d higher. Santos cleared 12,000 bags for New York. Brazilian port receipts of 21,000 bags included two days. Jundiahy receipts, 10,000 bags. SUGAR—With the markets for both raw and refined closed, trading in sugar futures today was quiet. July, 5.48c, closing 5.49c; September, 5.53c, closing 5.52c; December, 5.09c, closing 5.10c.

BID UP SPECIAL STOCKS.

New York, June 3.—Further feverish bidding up of special stocks served to distract the attention of traders in today's brief market from latest advices regarding the great marine battle off the coast of Denmark. Automobile issues held almost absolute sway, with some gains of sensational proportions and consequent new maximums. The logical inference to be drawn from this movement apparently is that events of importance and advantage to holders of these issues are in the making.

New records scored today included Willys-Overland common, which rose 20 points to 314, with 3 for the preferred at 111¼, and Chandler Motors up 11⅝ to 121⅛, while General Motors made the extraordinary gain of 87 points to 549, within easy distance of its high record.

Sugars and shipping shares trailed along with the motor group, Cuban-American Sugar rising 14 to 234, with a 15 point gain in South Porto Rico Sugar at 224⅞. Mercantile Marine preferred recovered to 98⅛.

News Affects Rails.

Rails and international issues as a whole were sentimentally affected by the news from abroad, Norfolk and Western, however, being the only noteworthy exception on its advance of 4½ points to the new maximum of 134½.

Additional gold was received from Canada, swelling the total from that source to almost $30,000,000, and $1,000,000 gold was shipped to Cuba in payment of commercial obligations.

Bonds were lower, particularly Anglo-French and Canadian war issues. Government bonds were persistently heavy on call during the week, with declines varying from one-fourth of 1 per cent to 1⅝ per cent, including Panama issues.

WILLYS CONFIRMS REPORTS OF A GIANT AUTO MERGER.

Overland, Chalmers, and Hudson Concerns Chief Factors in $200,000,000 Union.

Toledo, O., June 3.—Immediately after John N. Willys, president of the Willys-Overland company, arrived from New York at noon today he issued a statement officially confirming reports of organization of a $200,000,000 motor car combine. Mr. Willys' statement follows:

"A great many reports have been circulated of the contemplated merger of the Willys-Overland, Hudson, Chalmers, Autolite, and other companies. Negotiations are pending which without doubt will result in the formation of a holding company, the name of which has not yet been decided on, controlling the companies.

"The management of the new corporation will be controlled by the motor car interests and not affiliated banking interests. Louis Kaufmann, president of the Chatham and Phœnix National bank, New York, is forming a syndicate to underwrite the securities of the new corporation. He will have associated with him some of the strongest banking interests in New York City.

"The Willys-Overland as well as the Hudson and Chalmers companies will operate under the same managements and in exactly the same manner as they are operating at the present time. John N. Willys will be president of the new holding company. The capital will be approximately $200,000,000."

Plan Trade War on Ford.

New York, June 3.—The proposed $200,000,000 automobile combination, including Willys-Overland, Chalmers, Hudson, and Durant companies, will invade Henry Ford's field with a cheap automobile and one of the greatest commercial wars in the history of the country is impending, according to Wall street reports today.

Union of the John M. Willys and W. C. Durant interests brings Dupont money into the combine, say Wall street men, who point out that Ford's anti-preparedness campaign is contrary to the Du Pont interests.

PARADE GIVES THIEVES CHANCE TO BREAK SAFES.

Eagle-Ottawa and Wilder Leather Companies Suffer Losses Totaling More than $2,000.

Thieves who gained entrance to a building at 228 West Lake street, only a block from the Central station, by climbing a fire escape and forcing a second story window, obtained more than $2,000 from safes in the offices of the Eagle-Ottawa Leather company and Wilder & Co., another leather concern.

Both firms had closed their offices Friday evening until Monday morning in order to permit employés to march in the parade. An employé of Wilder & Co. discovered the loss when he went to the office at noon. He notified the police and the robbery in the other concern was discovered.

Investigation disclosed that $1,398.50, including $300 belonging to employés, had been taken from the offices of Wilder & Co. and $331 from the safe of the other concern.

Hog receipts of 11,000 hogs at Chicago yesterday met with a slow demand at unchanged to 10c lower prices. All packing houses were closed and killers were not disposed to stock up with reserves at prevailing prices. Top sales were made at $9.80, and the bulk sold at $9.55@9.75. Shippers were credited with purchases of only 500 head. Pigs were in limited supply and steady.

Final prices made hogs weak to 10c lower than a week ago, while pigs were 50@75c lower than at the close last week. Receipts for the week aggregated around 125,000, or about the same as last week and 3,000 less than a year ago. Shipments showed a slight increase.

Hog purchases for the day: Armour & Co., 2,900; Swift & Co., 1,500; Sulzberger & Sons, 1,100; Morris & Co., 600; Anglo-American, 800; Hammond, 900; Boyd-Lunham, 200; Miller & Hart, 400; Independent Packing company, 1,000; Brennan Packing company, 1,000; butchers, 500; shippers, 500; total, 11,400; left over, 2,500.

CATTLE.

Increased receipts caused a reaction in beef steer values at Chicago this week and quotations on all but prime heavy beeves finished at a loss of 40c to 60c from high point reached last week. Prime beeves, selling up to $11.00@11.05, the highest prices of the year, were exempt from the decline, while common, light grass fed steers showed most of the loss. There was a broad and active trade, with shippers taking a greater number of the offerings and packers stocking up liberally at the decline. Cows and heifers sold 50c to 75c lower than recent high point and bulls closed lower, while calves had a late rally which left them practically unchanged. Total receipts of cattle for the week increased about 5,000 head, while shipments were enlarged about 2,500 head.

Cattle at seven western markets for the week, 144,500, against 126,800 the preceding week, 109,500 a year ago, and 103,100 two years ago. Total for 1916 to date, 3,044,000, against 2,750,000 the same period in 1915.

SHEEP.

Sheep closed 25@50c lower than a week ago, while yearlings suffered a loss of 25c. Lambs finished at a decline of 50@75c for shorn lots and a loss of 75c@$1.00 for springers. Receipts for the week were smaller, but previous high prices had checked consumptive needs, packers' requirements were less urgent, and concessions had to be made to clear the market. Little was done in woolskins during the week, few lots being received. The best springers sold at $12.35. Shorn lambs closed at $10.35 for prime, while shorn wethers were quoted at $8.10 for the best.

LOGUE MURDER WOMAN CLEARS ALL "MYSTERY."

Margaret Kennedy, Who Took Poison, Says She Knows Nothing About Slaying of Jeweler.

"I don't know Melville Reeves or any of those other fellows. I never knew anything about the Logue diamond robbery and murder. I was in Kansas City then. I don't know how the papers got my picture or connected me with the case. I never have been married. I don't know why I attempted suicide. I had been drinking a little with Will Shaffer, the prize fighter, and I guess I just got to feeling blue."

Thus Margaret Kennedy—her real name is Merle Kennedy, her stage name is Merle Sheldon—cleared up all the "mystery" yesterday at St. Luke's hospital in an interview with Detective Sergeant H. J. Crowley.

"You can't get anything out of her," Crowley said. "I don't believe she knows what she does know and what she doesn't."

GOLDEN HAIRED GIRL LOST IN THE COUNTY HOSPITAL.

Found Wandering About Wards on Friday, but No Parent Has Come to Claim Her.

A golden haired girl was found wandering about the corridors of the county hospital on Friday in the midst of the visiting period. She could only explain that here name is "Dorothy."

After twenty-four hours Dr. Karl Meyer said that her parents had not been heard from. Dorothy, who is about 2½ years old, was placed in the care of the matron at the Maxwell street police station.

The child is neatly dressed and pretty.

ENVOY PAGE'S BOY MARRIES.

Son of Ambassador to England Weds Miss Katherine Sefton of Auburn, N. Y.

Syracuse, N. Y., June 3.—Miss Katherine Sefton, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Sefton of Auburn, N. Y., was married at noon today to Frank Copeland Page, son of Ambassador and Mrs. Walter Hines Page of the court of St. James, England. The ceremony was performed at St. Peter's Episcopal church, Auburn, by the Rev. Norton T. Houser.

Immediately after the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at The Pines, the summer home of the bride's parents.

Mrs. Charles G. Williams of Bridgeport, Conn., acted as matron of honor. Douglas Crocker of Fitchburg, Mass., was best man.

DROWNED PAINTING STEAMER

Man Falls Into Lake While Working on Vessel at Municipal Pier.

Harry W. Paston of Jacksonville, Fla., was drowned yesterday in the lake at the new municipal pier.

He and Ras Hansen of Manistee, Mich., were painting the name "Northern Michigan Transportation company" on the steamer Illinois, which was tied up at the pier. One of the ropes holding the scaffold broke and Paston and Hansen fell into the lake.

Capt. Carland of the Illinois coast guard was summoned and succeeded in rescuing Hansen, but Paston had already drowned.

LAKE SCAFFOLD FALL FATAL.

Harry Paxton, Painter, Drowns When at Work on Vessel's Side When Rope Parts.

Harry Paxton, a painter, was drowned in the lake yesterday when a scaffold on which he was standing while painting the name "Illinois" on a vessel owned by the Northern Michigan Transportation company, fell, dropping Paxton and Ray Hansen of Manistee, Mich., into the water. Members of the Chicago avenue station ambulance corps were able to revive Hansen, who kept himself afloat after the fall.

PACKARD CAPITAL RAISED.

Stockholders Vote an Increase of $5,000,000 in Common, Raising Capitalization to $21,000,000.

Detroit, Mich., June 3.—Stockholders of the Packard Motor Car company at a meeting here today authorized an increase of $5,000,000 in the common stock of the company. The increase makes the total capitalization $21,000,000. Henry B. Joy, who recently retired from the presidency, was elected chairman of the executive board. Alvan Macauley, former vice president, succeeded Mr. Joy as president.

Interests of Investors Overlooked.

In the regulation of corporations by representatives of the people the interests of every one concerned ought to receive due consideration. This is self-evident, whether the matter at issue is the fixing of transcontinental rates by an interstate commerce commission or the drafting of a traction ordinance by a city council. And as a rule all interests do have full consideration except those of the owners of the corporations. Largely because of their timidity the habit has been formed of considering "the railroads" and "the utilities" as something apart, something so separated from all else, that to oppress or starve these corporations is to do a service to the community.

It is obvious that this very general habit of thought is founded on error, because the interests of a community are closely bound up with those of its utility corporations and those of a nation with its railroads. Anything that favors these corporations enables them to give better service at smaller cost, and smaller cost in turn works for lower rates. Any exactions or restrictions that increase costs inevitably will bring either higher rates or less efficient service, or both.

Aside from the question of the general effect of oppressive regulations, however, is the special effect on investors. They are members of the community, and, could they be counted, would be found to form one of its largest groups. Their interests are clearly deserving of due consideration in the framing of laws and rules applying to corporations. They have invested their savings in the stocks and bonds of public necessities, and are entitled to a reasonable return. The way for them to get it is to guard their own interests constantly, to convince lawmakers and rate makers that they are a force to be reckoned with. They could do this most effectively as an organized body, but they can also accomplish much as individuals. Whether the matter at issue is the framing of a party platform or the drawing up of a traction ordinance investors ought to strive for a fair representation of their interests.

National Enameling and Stamping.

R. L. H., Ottumwa, Ia.—The National Enameling and Stamping company has always paid the 7 per cent dividend on its $8,546,601 of preferred stock, though sometimes it has not been fully earned. Since the war the company's business has increased because competition from Austria and Germany has ceased. In 1915 gross income was $1,936,621, the largest amount since 1912. Fixed charges amounted to $882,879, and the balance left after paying the preferred dividend equaled 2.02 per cent on the $15,591,800 of common stock. No dividends have been paid on the common since 1905.

Brief Answers.

G. B., Albion, Ill.—Some of the preferred railway shares and a few preferred industrials can be called "safe investments," but they yield only a low income return and have no chance of much increase in market value. Stocks that have possibilities of going up have equal possibilities of coming down. Safety and possibility of fluctuation in value are generally in inverse ratio.

E. L. M., Topeka, Kas.—The Pierce Oil corporation has not paid any dividends. This accounts for the price. It has outstanding $13,857,500 of stock, $9,900,000 of ten year debentures, and $2,000,000 of five year notes. It is supposed to be earning interest and 6 or 8 per cent on stock.

Small Boy Drowned.

Joseph Spilhal, 8 years old, 2623 South Troy street, was drowned in the drainage canal at South Kedzie avenue yesterday morning. He was pulling driftwood from the water, according to the Brighton Park police, and lost his balance.

Customs Chief Here.

Frank M. Halsted, chief of customs, of Washington, D. C., arrived in Chicago yesterday on a visit of inspection to the local customs office. After addressing them he was given a luncheon by the heads of the departments.

LA SALLE STREET GETS NEW MOTOR UNDERWRITING

Subscriptions to Durant Promotion Being Invited—Bank Surplus Lower.

Subscriptions are being invited in La Salle street to the underwriting of the new automobile combination of which W. C. Durant is to be the head. There was no information available as to terms, but the western representative of one New York banking house was taking subscriptions nevertheless. Considerable enthusiasm was shown among brokers who were perhaps influenced by the rise in prices of the concerns expected to go into the combination.

General Motors jumped 53 points over the last previous sale, opening at 515 against 462. The price advanced to 549, the high and close. Chevrolet Motor was up 10 points at 101, while Willys-Overland advanced from the close on Friday of 294 to a high price of 314. The final quotation was 310.

Bank Surplus Lower.

The New York bank statement showed a further decrease in the surplus reserve, bringing that item down to $55,850,340, a new low since the inauguration of the federal reserve bank system. The decrease was due to a loss in cash. Both deposits and loans were lower. Following are the figures:

ACTUAL STATEMENT.

	June 3, 1916.	Decrease.
Loans	$3,393,096,000	$ 9,799,000
Net demand deps.	3,344,892,000	23,709,000
Net time deps.	165,521,000	*4,249,000

Reserve required	575,175,660	4,934,990
Surplus	55,850,340	9,125,010

*Increase.

Of the reserve in vaults, $345,184,000 is specie.

Cosden Capital Increase.

Regarding the proposed dividend of 50 per cent on the stock of Cosden & Co., Vice President Gieske is quoted as saying:

"After the capital has been increased it is the intention to declare in addition to the 2 per cent regular dividend and 5 per cent extra dividend a cash dividend of 50 per cent. The regular and the extra 5 per cent will be paid on such stock as shareholders decide to subscribe to, and it is the intention so long as conditions remain as today to pay a regular dividend of 2 per cent and an extra of 5 per cent from quarter to quarter.

"This will necessarily delay declaration of the quarterly dividend which it has been the practice to pay on July 10. Owing to legal formalities the declaration and payment will be delayed until the latter part of July or early in August."

Dividends Declared.

R. J. Reynolds declared quarterly dividends of 1¾ per cent on the preferred and 3 per cent on the common stock. Also an extra dividend of 2 per cent on the common, the same as three months ago. All dividends are payable July 1 to stock of record June 20.

Prince Consolidated declared quarterly dividends of 2½ cents a share and an extra of same amount, dated June 24, to stock of record July 1.

Regular Cuban Cane Sugar preferred dividend of 1¾ per cent, payable July 1 to stock of record June 16.

Fifty per cent preferred stock dividend on American Zinc, payable June 15. Decision as to when to sell ex-dividend rests with exchange committee, but current belief will be on date new stock is issued.

NEWS OF THE FINANCIAL WORLD

Discussing the zinc market, the Lyon Investment company of Joplin, Mo., says: "The month of May opened with the price of top grade zinc rather weak at $115 per ton, from which it declined to $105 during the second week, with a further decline of $5 each succeeding week, and closed at $95, with the lower grades selling as low as $70. During the same period last year the price varied from $70 at the beginning of the month to $85 for top grade ores during the last week in May. The decline of 5 cents per pound in the price of spelter during the past six weeks has caused the decline in the price of ore, but it is believed by those well informed regarding inside conditions of the metal market that another movement is about due."

The report of Receiver Franklin of the International Mercantile Marine for April gives the exact earnings of the combined companies as $5,726,988. Of that amount $749,672 remains in the hands of the receiver, and the balance has been deposited in Great Britain, where the funds of the lines operating under the British flag are banked. From these net earnings must be deducted interest on the company's bonds, the British war tax, depreciation, etc.

The New York call money market is attracting some attention in speculative quarters. There have been tendencies noted on several occasions toward advances to higher levels. But subsequent declines have appeared, relieving for the time being further interest in the matter. The banks, however, are still predicting firmer rates at the end of the year.

Interests in the Maxwell Motor company announced the latter would maintain its independence in the automobile world and would not seek to consolidate with other companies. The Maxwell, it was asserted, has accumulated a record cash surplus, and it is expected that the end of the year will show earnings equal to at least five times the preferred stock dividend.

Gross profits of the United Fruit company for May are reported to have been in excess of $2,000,000. For the eight months to May 31 the net from all sources is estimated at $2,000,000.

◆

James J. Starrow has resigned as a director and as chairman of the finance committee of the General Motors company.

Deposited in the New York assay office $2,500,000 in gold bars brought in from Ottawa, making a total of $29,580,000 imported on the present movement.

NEW YORK, June 3.—The copper market continued quiet. It is said that resellers are finding comparatively few buyers and are offering electrolytic at from 27 to 28 cents for nearby and forward delivery, while the larger producers being well sold ahead are maintaining their prices at from 29 to 29½c for October and later months. Iron was uncha

IN FOREIGN STOCK MARKETS.

LONDON, June 3.—The stock market was rather staggered by the suddenness of the naval battle and the result is considered disappointing, but the belief is expressed that the enemy's object was not attained and the markets were little disturbed. Consols and the war loan opened nominally a quarter lower and hardened later. Colonial and Japanese bonds received fair attention and shipping shares were maintained, but business in other directions was meager. American securities after adjustment to parity ruled dull and closed steady. A new scheme of borrowing was inaugurated by the issue of two year war expenditure certificates of one, five, and ten thousand sterling each at 90.

Bar silver, 31d per ounce. Money, 3¾ per cent. Discount rates: Short bills and three months, 4 9-16@4⅝ per cent.

OILS.

NEW YORK, June 3.—COTTONSEED OIL—Prime crude, $9.60 nominal; prime summer yellow, $10.60; June, $10.85; July, $10.84; August, $10.85; September, $10.84; October, $10.00; November, $9.20; December, $9.06; January, $9.11; prime winter yellow and summer white, $11.00.

DRY GOODS.

NEW YORK, June 3.—Cotton goods quiet today with an easier tendency in print cloths. Yarns were quiet and linens were firm. Knit goods were in active demand for spring. Wool goods were firmer.

We were the first Chicago brokers to issue a special Market Letter on Automobile Securities. Our predictions on these stocks are being fulfilled every day.

Out of forty-four stocks listed in our first Market Letter on Automobile Securities, all but eight show material profits from increased market prices, some of them phenominal in the face of extraordinary dividend disbursements.

It will pay you to watch the market on automobile stocks. They are exceptionally strong today and, in our opinion, the public is not fully awake to the big dividend disbursements that are to come.

About three weeks ago we first advised purchase of HUPP Common, and since that time it has advanced from $7 per share to $13 per share, and we believe a price of $20 per share would not be out of line.

We Offer HUPP MOTOR Common

PRICE $13½ NET PER SHARE

Subject to Prior Sale and Change in Price. Wire Orders Our Expense.

Earnings this year should be more than 20% on present selling price.

In our opinion these shares are one of the best purchases in the market today.

It is expected these shares will soon be listed on New York Curb.

We believe buyers will make large and quick profits by advance in price.

Clients who have followed our advice on MOTOR SHARES have made tremendous profits.

Our previous recommendations:—Two years ago Saxon at $150, since sold at $1,800. Eight months ago Chalmers at $90, now $200. Two months ago Grant Common at $7, now $11.50.

On Thursday morning THE TRIBUNE published a communication from O. L. Wahl, in which complaint was made of the growing practice on the part of certain real estate men, but particularly builders and contractors, of rebating to tenants of their flat buildings and submitting a fictitious rental showing to purchasers of their properties.

The statement asserted that all kinds of concessions are being made, with the idea of being able to show that earnings of the buildings in question justify the prices that are asked for them. This Mr. Wahl termed a swindle, pure and simple, and with the overbuilding and overlending which is being done in connection with flat construction was, he asserted, making well informed people loath to buy anything in the shape of real estate.

Many Similar Complaints.

This is not the first complaint THE TRIBUNE has received in this connection, and attention has been called on several occasions in this column to the bad effect these methods, if permitted to continue, were certain to have on the flat investment market, as well as the market for real estate securities.

There are many of the best class of real estate men who, while admitting the evils complained of, have deprecated the idea of giving any particular publicity to them, on the ground it would tend to discredit the entire real estate market and work injury both to innocent as well as guilty.

There are others, too, who are of the opinion the situation is not nearly as bad as it is said to be, but there is a growing sentiment among the best class of real estate men that the situation is bad, not hopelessly so, but bad enough to call for heroic treatment.

Brokers' Opinions Sought.

With a view to sounding the sentiment of real estate men, expressions of opinion were asked from several representative brokers and others interested in real estate matters as to the complaint voiced by Mr. Wahl.

President Paul Steinbrecher of the Chicago real estate board said in part:

"It is undoubtedly true that there are sound grounds for criticism relating to the methods of construction of certain types of apartment buildings recently erected, and to the manner in which such buildings have been financed, rented, and offered for sale."

While of the opinion the situation is not as bad as the public might be led to believe, he suggested as remedies: First, a more stringent building code and its strict enforcement; second, loan agents should be more conservative in making loans; third, real estate men should be hesitant about offering to rent or sell apartments that "are not what they seem," and there should be more care on the part of the nonresident in buying or trading for flat properties.

Views of Other Experts.

Following are views of others:

Harrison B. Riley, president of the Chicago Title and Trust company—Unfortunately, there is too much of truth in the statements made by Mr. Wahl. All that he says as to the methods employed by a cerian class of operators with reference to fictitious rents, overbuilding, and overlending is true and unless stopped the investment market for flat property will be discredited as well as real estate securities based on this class of property.

Edgar M. Snow—I am sorry to have to agree with most of what Mr. Wahl says, but I think he is too sweeping in his statements as to the real estate situation as a whole. It is a bad situation and trouble is likely to come out of it, but not to the extent indicated by Mr. Wahl. Of course, speculative builders of a certain class as well as too generous loan agents are largely responsible for the evils complained of, but they also are to a considerable extent due to the grasping policy of small lenders in their desire to secure a maximum rate of interest at the expense of the security. If they were more conservative many of these excessive bond issues could never be floated.

Sees No Cause for Alarm.

Jean A. Carroll—In my opinion there is no cause for alarm. This same question has been raised periodically during the last twenty years in Chicago and will continue to be raised with the continued growth of the city. Chicago real estate, however, is a product of such resiliency that up to this time it has withstood the errors of promoters and speculators. There are some phases of the mortgage and building situation that demand attention. There is no doubt the recent period of easy money has created a tendency to overloan and overbuild. That mortgage house which first announces that it will supply with each bond issue a certificate of valuation signed by a competent independent body of appraisers will be the pioneer in the greatest real estate reform that Chicago ever has experienced.

Speculators Blamed.

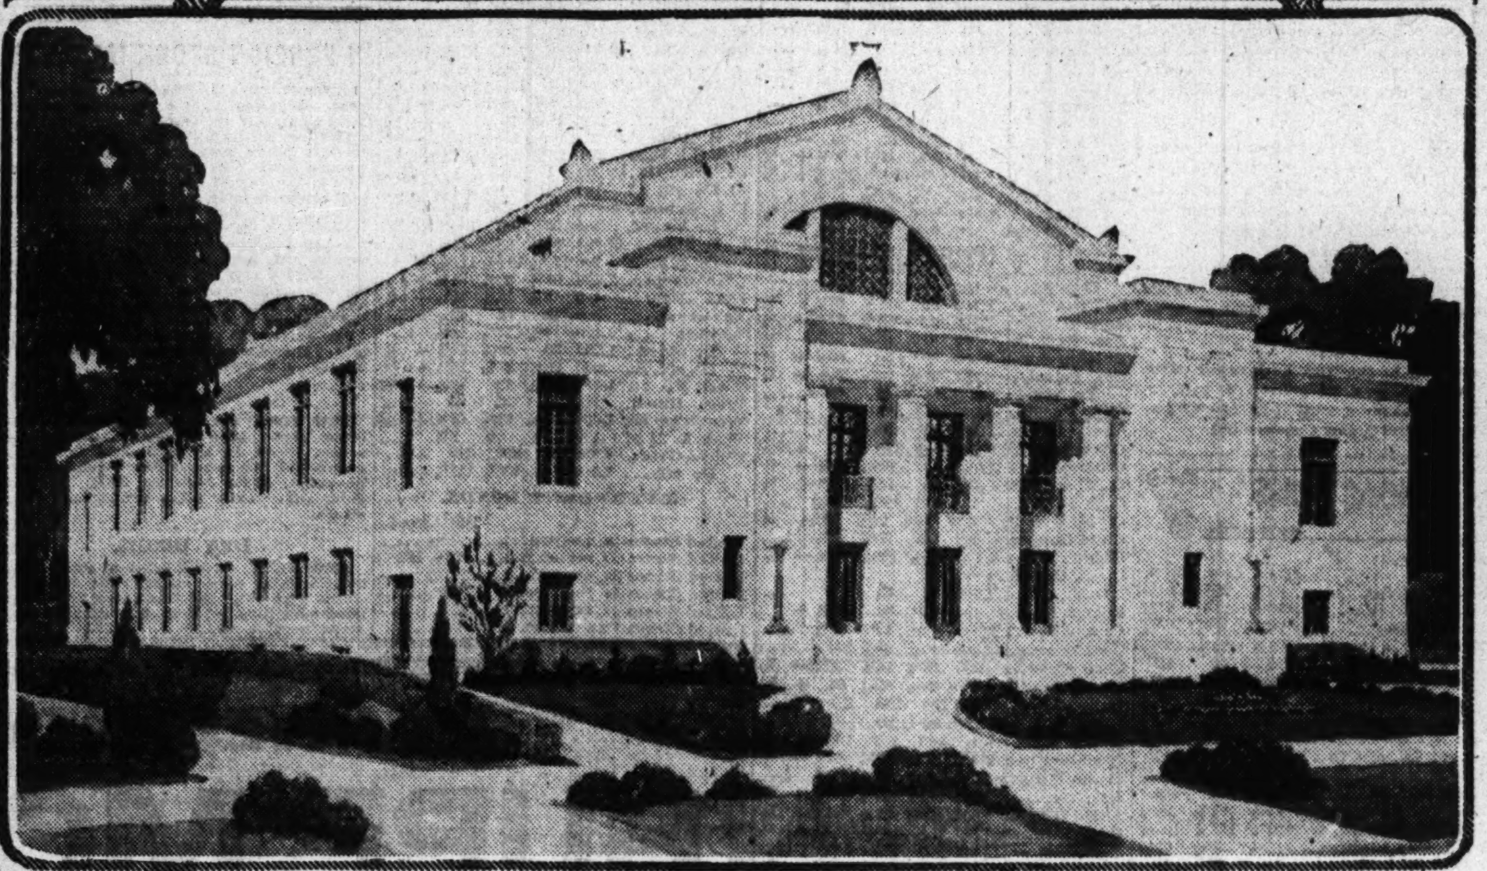
Wylys W. Baird of Baird & Warner—I regret to say there is too much truth in what Mr. Wahl says. I believe, however, that the big rental concessions are confined principally to a few large speculative builders, who have no interest in the kind of building they put up or what it produces after they have disposed of it. Their object is to run the building up as cheaply and quickly as possible and dispose of their alleged equity for what they can get for it, usually in vacant in the city, and thus indefinitely repeat their operations. This system demoralizes tenants of reputable agencies and makes legitimate renting all the more difficult. It would be a godsend to the community if the real estate fraternity would get together and put a stop to the dishonest concessions and excessive loans which have prevailed so freely of late.

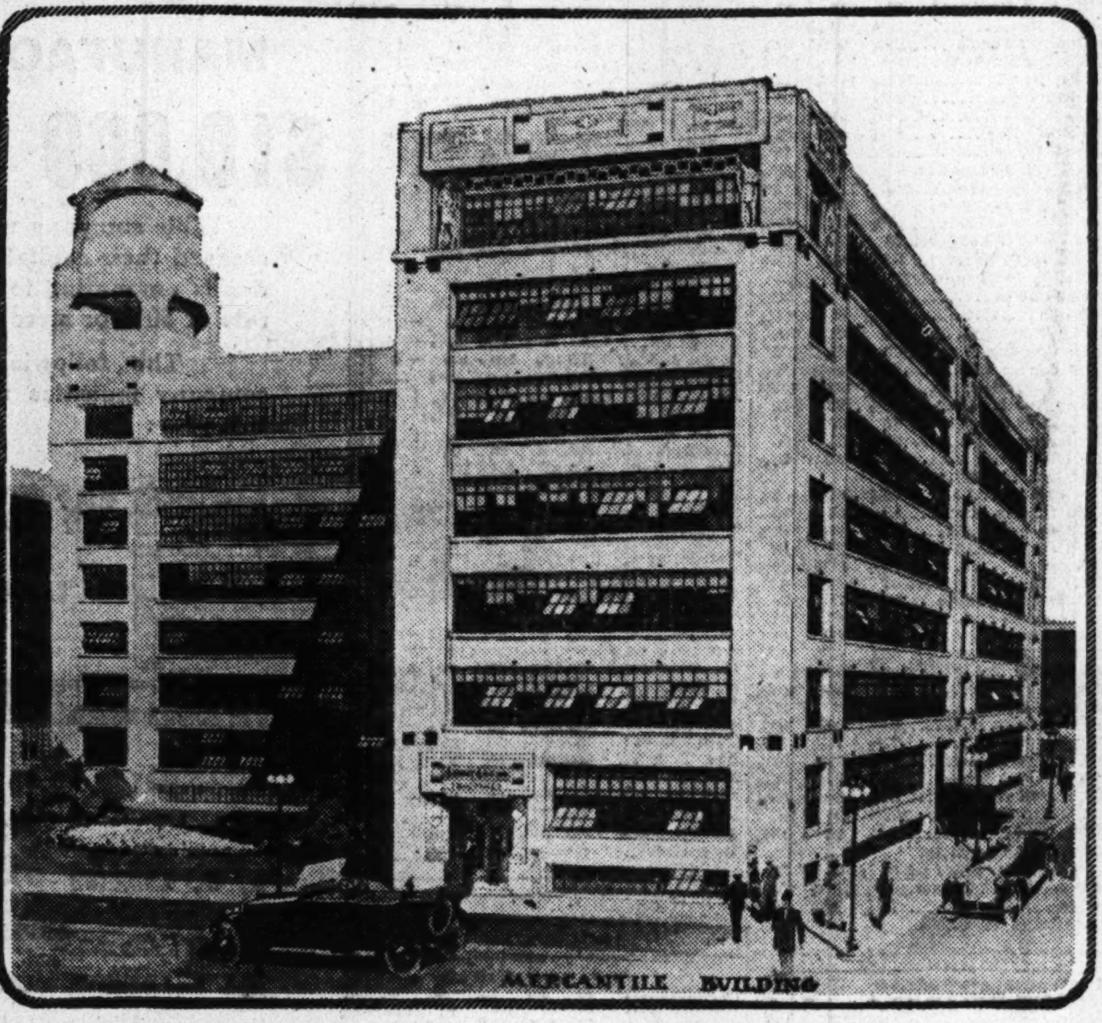
Sees Nothing Serious.

Murray Wolbach—In my opinion M. Wahl's article does not tell anything that was not heretofore known. While there are undoubtedly dishonest real estate men, as is the case in all classes of business, I am glad to say that at the present they constitute an almost negligible percentage of the whole. If apartment buildings are so poorly constructed and constitute such poor investments, why is it that so many have been sold and resold during the last twenty-five years? In my opinion there is an exceedingly slim foundation for the charges made by Mr. Wahl.

ADD TO CITY'S BEAUTY

New Church of Christ, Scientist, Going Up on Longwood Drive, Is Shown in Upper Picture. Below Is Model Building Being Erected for Printing Company.





Work has begun on the new Thirteenth Church of Christ, Scientist, on the lot owned by the church on Longwood drive just south of One Hundred and Third street. It will be in the classic style of architecture and will be a notable addition to the several handsome church buildings of the ridge. It will be 81 feet wide, with a depth of 117 feet, and will sit well back from the street, allowing approach by semi-circular walks leading from both north and south to the main entrance. It will have an exterior finish of gray brick and Bedford stone and will seat between 700 and 800 people. The Sunday school room below the auditorium will seat an additional 500. Howard L. Cheney is the architect and S. Wood & Co. have been awarded the generl contract. It is expected to complete it within ten to twelve months.

The building being erected by Winston & Co. at 360-62 East Grand avenue for the Lammers Shilling company, and which was designed by Paul Gerhardt, embodies a radical departure from the usual style of construction for printing buildings. It will be seven stories and basement, all of reinforced concrete and entirely fireproof. There will be no dark places in the building, as about 85 per cent of the wall space will be glass. It will be of the sprinkled type, with freight and passenger elevators, a vacuum system of steam heating, and highly developed electric light and power system. Its cost is placed at about $150,000.

FLAT DEALING ON SMALL SCALE; ONE LARGE DEAL.

Apartment house property did not make much of a showing, transactions generally being of a rather unimportant character. In point of magnitude the sale of the Oak Park Mansions, at the northwest corner of Lake street and Scoville avenue, Oak Park, by Samuel Lanski to Charles M. Wheeler of the former real estate firm of Haentze & Wheeler, for an indicated $170,000, held first place.

The sale was subject to an incumbrance of $105,000, the purchaser giving back a part purchase money mortgage for $25,000, and according to the revenue stamps on the document paying $40,000 for the equity. The lot is 190x140 feet, the improvements comprising a three story and English basement building containing forty-eight apartments of three, four, and five rooms.

The building is expected to have a gross annual rent of $24,000. It was only recently completed and will be in charge of Regelin, Jenson & Co., who were the brokers in the transaction, representing both parties.

Maria J. Davis et al. of St. Louis sold to James J. Guinan of Chicago the property northwest corner Washington boulevard and Carpenter street, 125x150 feet, improved with two story building containing twenty-four apartments, for an indicated consideration of $60,000.

KUPPENHEIMER BUYS TRACT.

Louis B. Kuppenheimer, president of B. Kuppenheimer & Co., has added to his handsome country home near Winnetka by the purchase from W. D. McKenzie of a tract of about twenty-five acres adjoining. It is about a mile northwest from Winnetka, and overlooks the Skokie valley. According to the revenue stamps the consideration was $25,000. Mr. Kuppenheimer's present home comprises about six acres. The tract purchased is bounded by Fig street on the north, Pine street on the south, and Lake street, extended, on the west.

WOMAN'S CLUB SITE PURCHASE WEEK'S FEATURE

Business Property, Inside and Out, Main Factor in Trading.

The features of a fairly satisfactory week's real estate market were the closing of the purchase by the Chicago Woman's club of the property on Eleventh street, just west of Michigan avenue, on which it is to erect a $500,000 home, and the sale of a large piece of vacant on Sheridan road at Stratford place at the rate of $750 a front foot.

There were several good sized transactions in outside business property, although the showing was not up to that of the previous week; flat properties did not make much of a showing, but there was something doing in residence and residence vacant. Business property, both inside and outside, was the main factor in the week's business.

$225,000 for Woman's Club Site.

The property acquired by the Chicago Woman's club from Jacob L. Kesner comprises 104x120 feet, south front, 127 feet west of Michigan avenue, and the consideration was $225,000. The deal was negotiated by Edgar M. Snow & Co. and Oliver & Co. While tentative plans have been prepared for an eight story building it is stated the applications for space from various clubs and societies of a similar character are sufficient to fill a building of sixteen stories.

The plans, prepared by Architects Pond & Pond, provide for a theater with a seating capacity of 1,500 on the first floor, while the upper floors will be used exclusively by the Woman's club and kindred organizations.

There will be a hall with a seating capacity of 500 on the sixth floor. There also will be a lounge, a dining room where 135 persons can be served at one time, a kitchen, storage rooms, and accommodations for the executive departments of the club, as well as the employés.

Julius Rosenwald has promised to contribute $50,000 in the event of a contribution of a like amount from four others, and from this source and life memberships it is expected to raise $500,000

Becklenberg Gets Two Ranches.

In outside business property the largest transaction of the week was the sale by Frederick Becklenberg to J. Jacobs of the new three story store, flat, and office building at the northwest corner of Fifty-fifth street and Ingleside avenue for a reported consideration of $125,000, subject to $65,000. The building is on a lot 110x125 feet and contains six stores, eighteen flats, and two suites of offices. In part payment Mr. Becklenberg took a 480 acre ranch in South Dakota and one of 240 acres in South Dakota.

A notable west side deal was the sale by Louis Frank to Robert McNair, with the real estate firm of Sam Brown Jr., of the property on the west side of Halsted street, 136 feet north of Washington street, 99x117 feet. It is improved with a one story building on part of the property, containing three stores, with a three story building on the rest of the lot, containing a store on the ground floor and a hotel above. According to the revenue stamps on the document the consideration was $100,000. R. D. Hill & Co. made a loan of $50,000, five years, at 5 per cent on the property.

South Side Corner Sold.

Record was made of the transfer by the Chicago Title and Trust company to Henry Wolf of the property at the southwest corner of Drexel avenue and Sixty-third street, lot 50x124 feet, with store and flat improvements. According to the revenue stamps $55,000 was paid for the equity, the sale being subject to incumbrances, amount not stated.

Frank J. Birk of Birk Bros. Brewing company has purchased from Charles Boop the property at 3345 North Clark street, opposite the Clark street station of the Northwestern elevated road, improved with a three story building containing a store, bowling alley, billiard hall, etc., for a reported consideration of $26,500. Mr. Birk conveyed in part payment property valued at $10,000. McCollam & Kruggel represented Mr. Birk and R. A. Connell Mr. Bopp.

BOETIUS SULLIVAN BUYS SHERIDAN ROAD VACANT.

In an interesting sale of residence vacant in the exclusive residential district on Wellington street east of Sheridan road, Boetius H. Sullivan, son of Roger C. Sullivan, acquired from Jesse J. Ricks, an attorney, who had taken title for Mr. Sullivan, two parcels of 50x165 feet each, 270 feet east of Sheridan road, south front, for a total consideration of $48,000, which is at the rate of $480 a front foot. While no plans are said to have been made yet, it is understood Mr. Sullivan plans to improve with a handsome residence.

Record also was made of the acquirement by Josephine Arnold from N. A. W. Sievers by quitclaim of the residence property at the southeast corner of Sheridan road and Hollywood avenue, formerly the home of Sidney Ossoski, at one time claim agent of the Chicago Railways company. It is a handsome three story structure on a lot 55x116 feet, west front, and was conveyed to the present grantee for an indicated consideration of $37,500.

In another interesting north side residence deal Paul Steinbrecher & Co. have sold for Lucy P. and Dora Allen the three story stone front residence at 1424 North State parkway to Charles E. Kremer, an attorney, for an indicated consideration of $20,000. Winston & Co. were also associated in the deal. This is the fourth residence sale Steinbrecher & Co. have made in this block since the beginning of the year.

GROWTH OF FLAT BUILDING.

The growing predominance of flat construction as compared with a few years ago is shown by the fact that during 1910 and 1911 it constituted about 35 per cent of the entire building operations of the city, while in 1915 it amounted to over 60 per cent of the whole.

Leases and Loans.

There was little doing of any importance in the way of business building leases in the downtown district, the showing being about the poorest of the year. In a mortgage loan way the feature of the week's business was the loan of $750,000 made by the Merchants' Loan and Trust company, trustee, to Rand, McNally & Co., running fifteen years at 5½ per cent, and secured by the ten story store and office building and the leasehold interest in the ground on which it stands at the northwest corner of Clark and Harrison streets, running through to La Salle street. This plot has a south frontage of 210½ feet with a depth on Clark and La Salle streets of 298 feet. The loan is for the purpose of refunding an existing incumbrance which was placed in connection with the construction of the building. It is provided that any part of the loan may be paid on any interest payment day by the payment of the principal and 3 per cent premium.

In another interesting loan, made a matter of record, Boetius H. Sullivan, son of Roger C. Sullivan, has given a trust deed to the Peoples Trust and Savings bank to secure a loan of $82,000, ten years at 5 per cent, on the property at the northeast corner of Washington boulevard and Curtis street, the old Second Regiment armory property, which Mr. Sullivan acquired some time ago and which has been remodeled for use as a garage for the accommodation of machines used in carrying mail.

C. C. Mitchell & Co. have made a loan of $175,000 in the form of a serial 6 per cent bond issue to R. T. Race in connection with the erection by him of a store, theater, office, and apartment building at the southwest corner of Irving Park boulevard and Crawford avenue, to cost about $325,000. It will contain twelve stores, eight offices, and thirty-eight one room apartments. It also will contain a large billiard hall, bowling alleys, and lodge halls. It is to be of fireproof construction.

Edward Hagelin has given a trust deed to E. P. Nelson to secure a loan of $50,000, six years, at 6 per cent, on the Winnemac apartments at 5045-51 North Robey street.

John M. Smyth company has acquired another large building on the west side for a long term. It will be used in connection with its large mail order business, this being the fourth structure in that locality which the company occupies. The company leased the five story and basement building at 728 and 730 West Madison street from Martin A. Ryerson for an annual rent of $9,000. The lessees will take possession at once and make important alterations. Both parties were represented by White & Tabor. This building has been occupied for the last twenty years by the Hartman Furniture company.

Joseph M. Fitzgerald, Daniel J. Cahill, and Frank M. Flynn have leased the vacant land, 125x125, on the west side of Emerald avenue, 50 feet south of Root street, for thirty-five years at a total rental of $26,250. In addition they will pay taxes and assessments. The lessees will construct a large garage on the plot. W. D. Kerfoot & Co., in connection with Brady & Buckley, negotiated the lease.

The Chicago Title and Trust company is trustee in a loan of $175,000, seven years, at 6 per cent, to Ambrosia Y. Race, secured by the Race building and 142x173 feet of ground at the southwest corner of Irving Park boulevard and Crawford avenue.

Notes of Subdividers.

"Industrial District" is the name of the new industrial subdivision which Frederick H. Bartlett & Co. are to open today. The tract, which is located at West Sixty-third street and Fifty-eighth avenue, comprises ninety acres and was purchased by Bartlett & Co. from a nonresident estate and divided into about 400 lots. Residence lots, 25x125 feet, are to sell as low as $58, business lots as low as $115, and business lots on Sixty-third street as low as $449. The Argo-Clearing yards are nearby and several factories and railroad yards are in the immediate vicinity. It is said that more than 100,000 people are employed in the various concerns in the vicinity of this property. A street car line runs directly to it.

William A. Bond & Co. have closed an interesting deal in southwest side property in the sale for Warren Gorrell to the Western Realty company, a copartnership, of the triangular shaped parcel containing about five acres between Archer avenue, Forty-third street, and Sacramento avenue. The consideration is not given, but it is reported the property has been held at $45,000. It will be subdivided as Rozenski, Lipski & Zacher's subdivision and placed on the market. D. K. Walshin was also interested in the sale.

We will make loans upon well located store or apartment buildings at

SHERIDAN ROAD VACANT BRINGS $750 A FOOT

Purchase of Tract Facing Lake by Albert M. Johnson Leads Deals.

One of the notable features of the week's market was the purchase by Albert M. Johnson, president of the National Life Insurance company, from John F. Brady of vacant Sheridan road frontage at the rate of $750 a foot. It covered the 200x230 feet on the road running from Stratford place to Cornelia avenue, for an indicated consideration of $150,000.

It is considered one of the most attractive pieces of property in the vicinity, enjoying the unique advantage of having three frontages and facing the lake. It is a record figure for that vicinity, and is a striking illustration of the rapidity with which values have advanced in that territory.

In addition Mr. Johnson also has purchased the 91x200 feet directly west and adjoining this property, which gives him a frontage of 200 feet on the road with a depth of 321 feet on both side streets. A consideration of $35,000 was paid for the last named parcel, making a total consideration of $185,000 for the two.

Buys for Speculation.

It is stated that Mr. Johnson has no plans regarding the improvement of the property, and it is thought his purchase was of a speculative character.

Mr. Wheeler of Baird & Warner represented all the parties to the transaction. Mr. Johnson then conveyed to Norman E. Johnson, who conveyed the property in trust to the Chicago Title and Trust company to secure a loan of $75,000, five years, at 5 per cent. and then reconveyed to Albert M. Johnson.

Mr. Brady also purchased through Mr. Wheeler 40x150 feet about 120 feet south of the corner of Stratford place, being south and adjoining the property owned by Mr. Behr. The lot is restricted to residences, and a reported consideration of $20,000 is given.

Windsor Park District Deal.

An interesting deal in the Windsor Park district involving improvements to cost around $150,000 was the sale by John H. Brown to Robert Fries of the southwest corner of South Shore avenue and Seventy-fourth street, with 150 feet on South Shore, 115 feet Seventy-fourth street and 506 feet on Colfax avenue, between Seventy-fourth and Seventy-fifth streets, for an indicated $13,500.

It is the purpose to improve the Colfax avenue frontage with three and six apartment buildings, and with business buildings on South Shore avenue. The sale was negotiated by Bach & Fries.

Guy L. McKinnie, trustee, has sold to Sinclair M. Seater the property at the northeast corner of Hinman avenue and Kedzie street, Evanston, 143 feet on Hinman and 173 feet on Kedzie, for a reported consideration of $17,875. It is stated the purchaser plans the erection next spring of an apartment building. W. H. Mellin of J. H. McCartney & Co. was the broker.

The vacant at the southeast corner of Kedzie street and Chicago avenue, Evanston, [illegible] feet, near the Main street stations of the Northwestern L and Chicago and Northwestern road, has been sold by the Clark estate to Jennie A. Lytle, consideration nominal, but said to be $16,000. Leo P. Perron & Co. were the brokers.

Samuel Lanski and Hubert B. Howard have purchased from Jennie Peterson and Mary M. Johnson 86x133 feet of vacant land in Columbia avenue, east of Sheridan road, for $15,000, upon which they will construct a large apartment building.

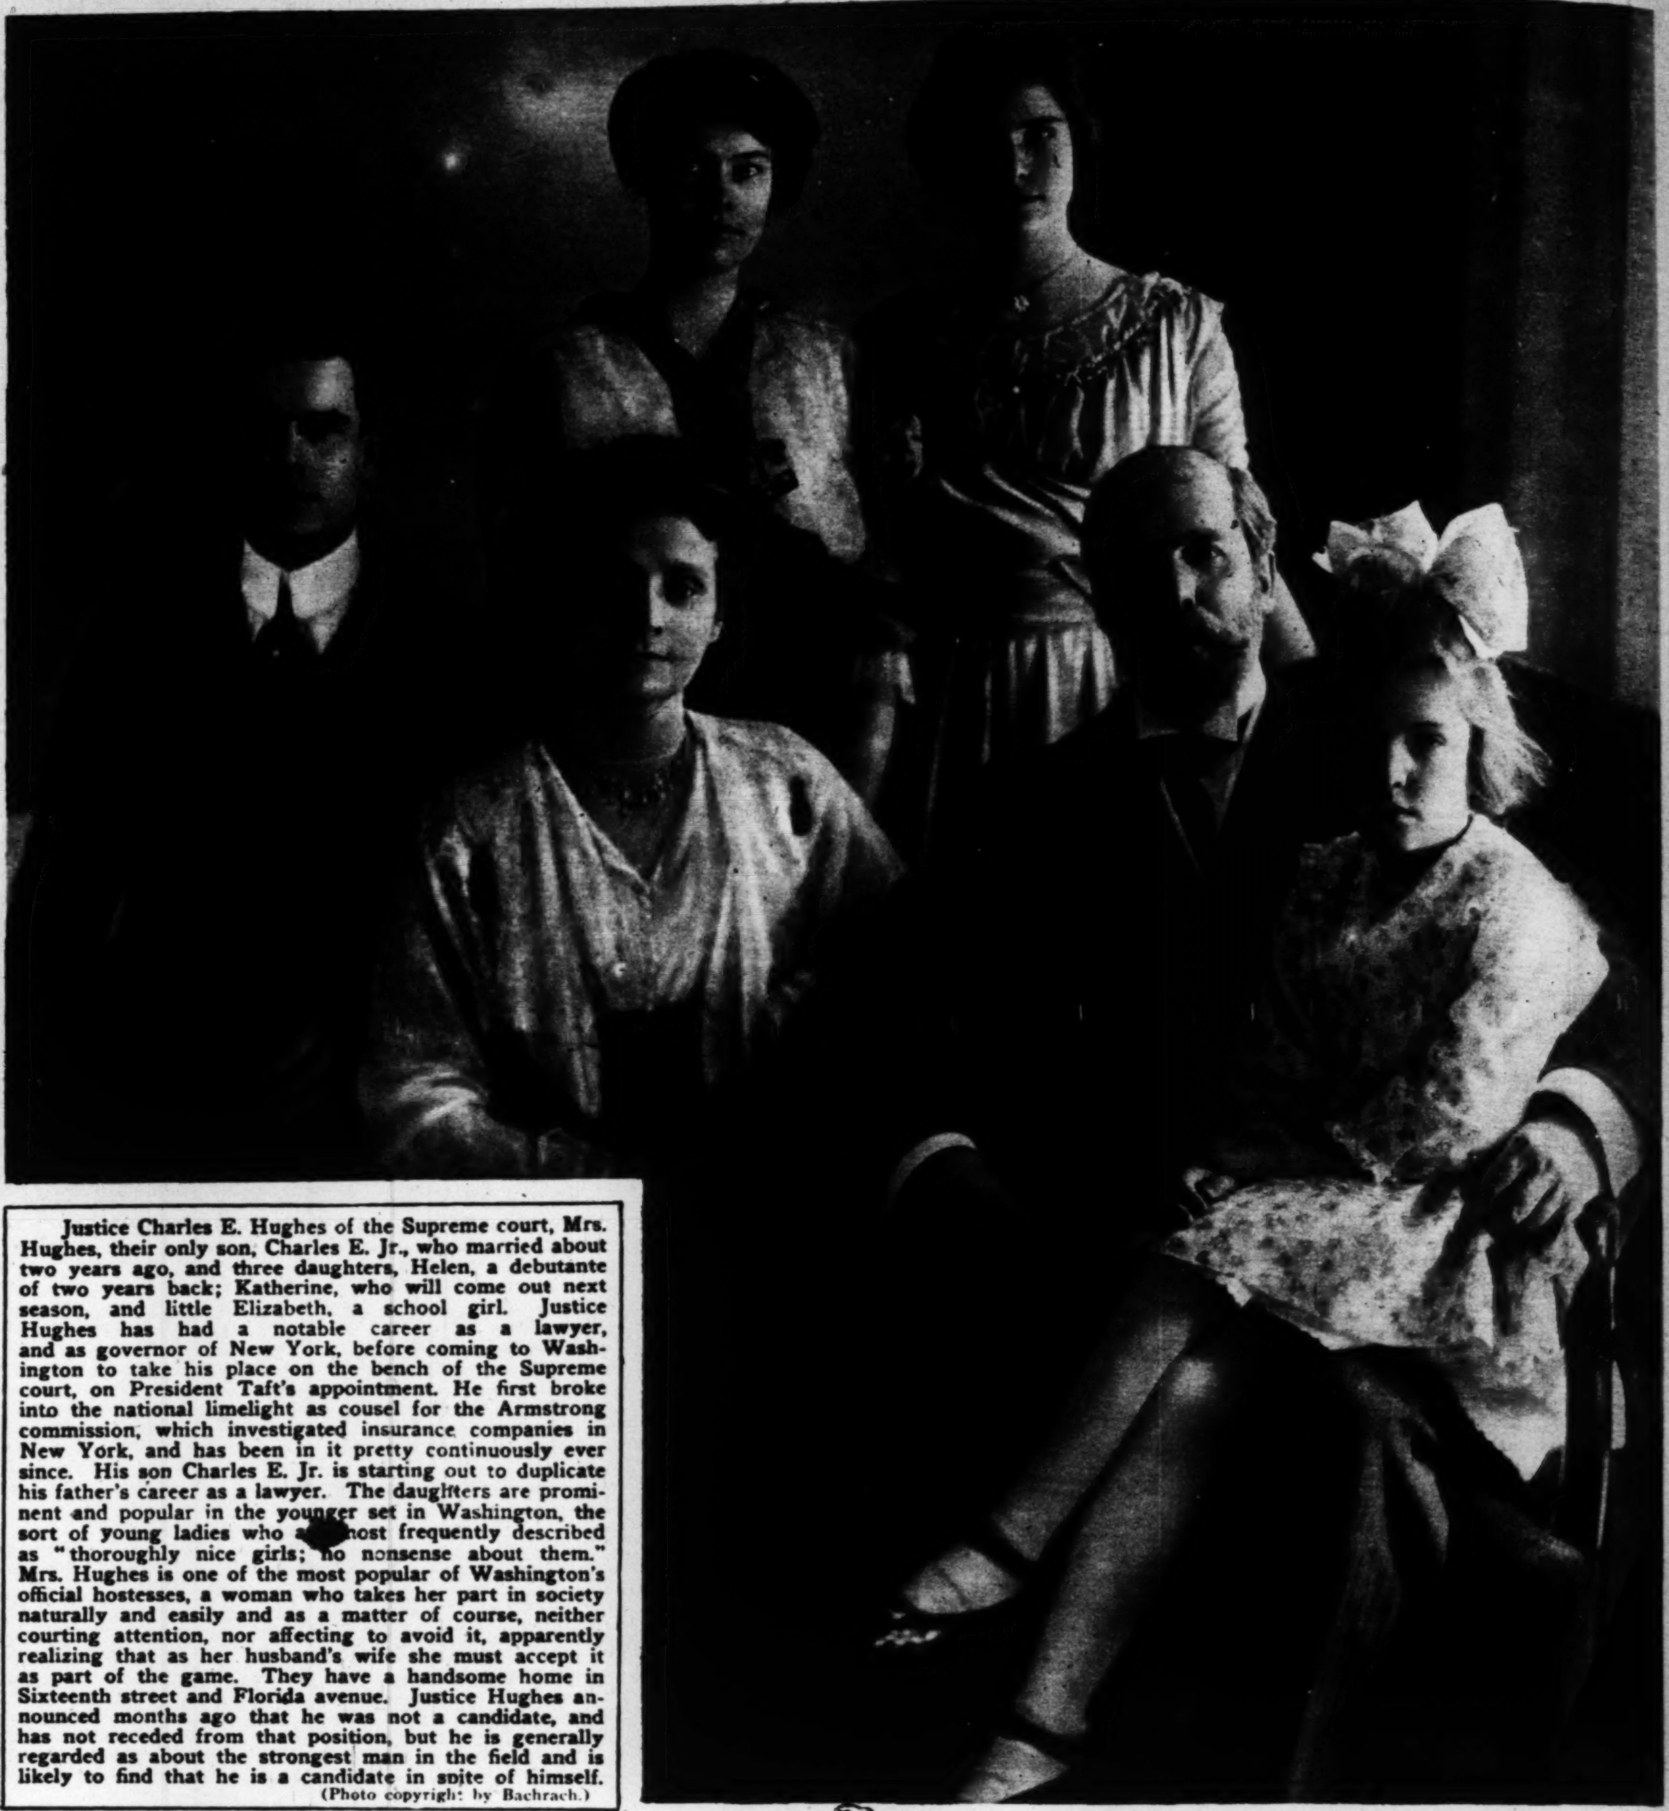
JUSTICE CHARLES EVANS HUGHES AND GOV. CHARLES S. WHITMAN.
(Photograph by Underwood & Underwood.)



Justice Charles E. Hughes of the Supreme court, Mrs. Hughes, their only son, Charles E. Jr., who married about two years ago, and three daughters, Helen, a debutante of two years back; Katherine, who will come out next season, and little Elizabeth, a school girl. Justice Hughes has had a notable career as a lawyer, and as governor of New York, before coming to Washington to take his place on the bench of the Supreme court, on President Taft's appointment. He first broke into the national limelight as cousel for the Armstrong commission, which investigated insurance companies in New York, and has been in it pretty continuously ever since. His son Charles E. Jr. is starting out to duplicate his father's career as a lawyer. The daughters are prominent and popular in the younger set in Washington, the sort of young ladies who a[illegible]ost frequently described as "thoroughly nice girls; no nonsense about them." Mrs. Hughes is one of the most popular of Washington's official hostesses, a woman who takes her part in society naturally and easily and as a matter of course, neither courting attention, nor affecting to avoid it, apparently realizing that as her husband's wife she must accept it as part of the game. They have a handsome home in Sixteenth street and Florida avenue. Justice Hughes announced months ago that he was not a candidate, and has not receded from that position, but he is generally regarded as about the strongest man in the field and is likely to find that he is a candidate in spite of himself.

Charles Seymour Whitman, governor of New York, was born in Connecticut and educated at Amherst and New York university. Foe of graft and nemesis of crooks, they call him. He was alternately assistant corporation counsel of New York City, president of the New York board of city magistrates, judge of the Court of General Sessions, and district attorney for the state of New York. In the last named office he conducted a successful prosecution of the Becker murder gang, which ended with Becker's electrocution, and assailed the police graft system of New York City. He was elected governor of New York last year. Mrs. Whitman is an enthusiastic sportswoman, who once flew in an aeroplane. She is an ardent suffragist and a social leader of great popularity in her state. The Whitmans have two children, a boy and a girl.

The Roosevelts, their activities having been "first page stuff" for a number of years, are well enough known to have their pictures printed without much comment. The members of the colonel's family have not been photographed so frequently as the colonel has himself, so his picture is given the relatively unimportant position you see on the page. Mrs. Roosevelt, it may be said, is a "mother" woman whose whole life has been her husband and her children. So seldom has her personality been thrust into the limelight of publicity (and then against her wishes) that there are very few photographs of her to be found in any newspaper office. One of the few public acts in which she has participated was that of marching in the recent New York preparedness parade.

Herbert Spencer Hadley, the "trust buster" and the "mysterious stranger," is Missouri's favorite son. Practiced law in Kansas City, was prosecuting attorney for Jackson county, Missouri, and later was attorney general for the state. Prosecuted cases successfully against the Standard Oil company, the railroads, the harvester trust, insurance trust, lumber trust, and race track gamblers of St. Louis. Governor of Missouri 1904-1908. He was a delegate at large to the 1912 convention, but was seated only after a contest. A stampede at the convention started in his direction which almost nominated him for the presidency. Mrs. Hadley, who was Miss Agnes Lee of Kansas City, is a member of the D. A. R. and a clubwoman, but her main interests have been in her home, in which there are three children. She has always aided her husband in revising his speeches and helping him collect evidence and reference data. She is fond of study, while Mr. Hadley finds his best recreation in hunting.

Former Senator Burton of Ohio has always been "of Ohio," was born there in 1851, brought up there, graduated from Oberlin college, practiced law in Cleveland, and came to congress from Ohio in 1889. He served one term, skipped two, came back in 1895, and served continuously until in 1909, when he resigned to go into the senate. One senate term was enough for him. He declined to run for a second, and for the last year has been traveling and observing. He served ten years as chairman of the rivers and harbors committee in the house and is regarded as about the final authority on matters within its jurisdiction. He is a bachelor, and is reported to be a woman hater. Naturally he was not much of a social figure while in Washington. His colleagues in the senate regard him as a rather unusual classical scholar.

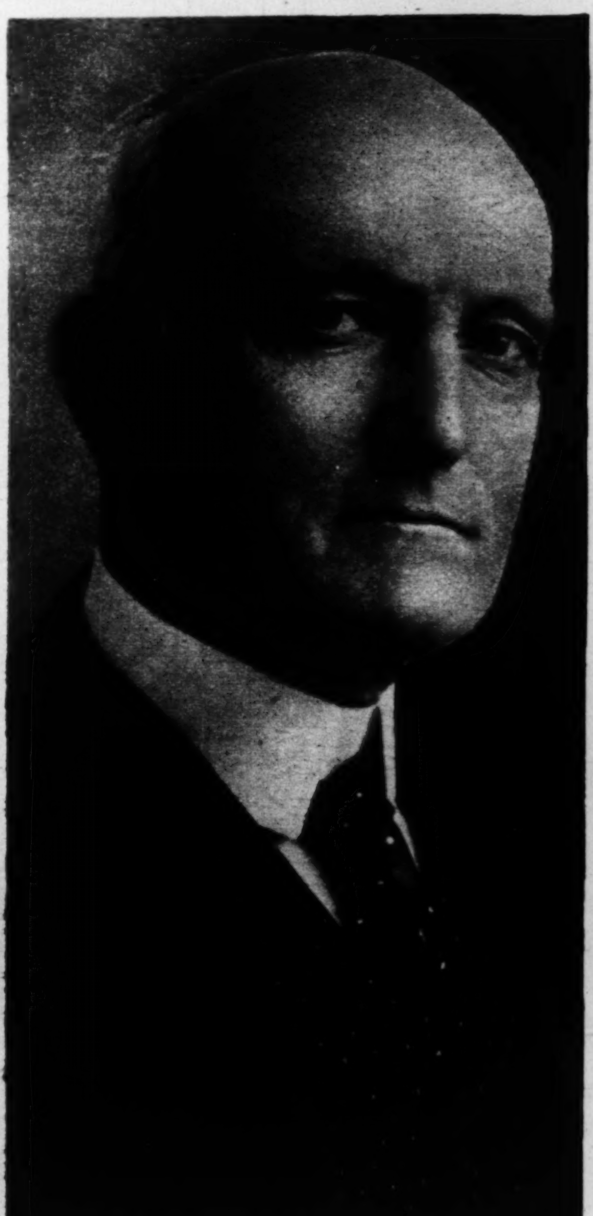
MISS RUTH McCALL.



MRS. McCALL.

Governor Samuel Walker McCall of Massachusetts served 20 years in the national house of representatives, 1893-1913. Was regarded as a rock ribbed Republican, a stand patter of the stand patters. Though he was born in Pennsylvania he is New England to the backbone—graduate of Dartmouth, practiced law in Boston, married Miss Ella Esther Thompson of Lyndonville, Vt., ran a Boston paper, served in the Massachusetts house of representatives before coming to congress, and has been governor of Massachusetts since. There are five children, all grown—two sons, both married (one to a daughter of Thomas Lawson), and three daughters, Ruth, Margaret, who is now at the National Service school's Chevy Chase camp at Chevy Chase, Md., and Katherine, not in very good health, at present visiting friends in Virginia. During their residence in Washington while Mrs. McCall and her daughters were popular, they were not particularly devoted to society, though their intimates were among the most exclusive of official and resident circles. Mrs. McCall was prominent in the organization of the Congressional club and at one time was candidate for president thereof.

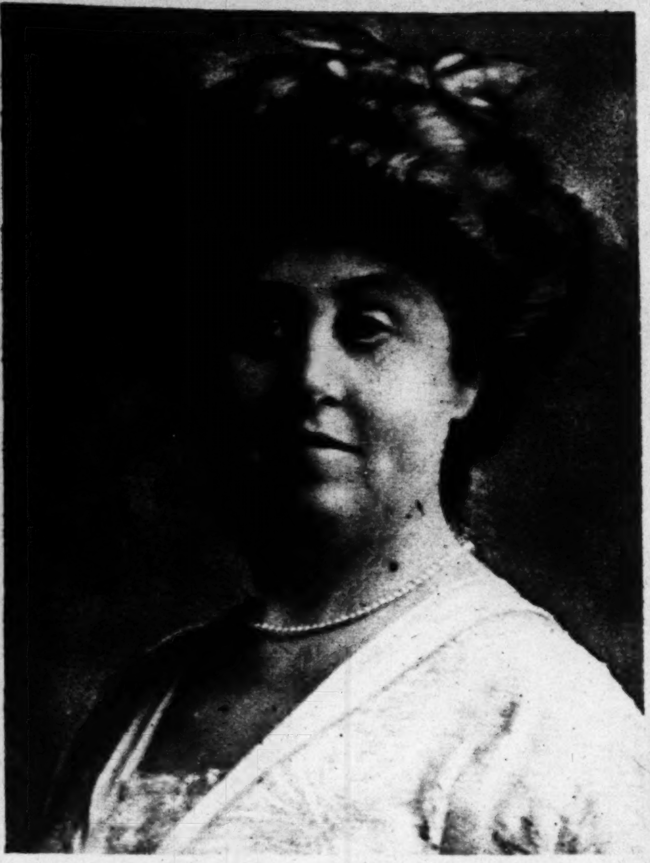
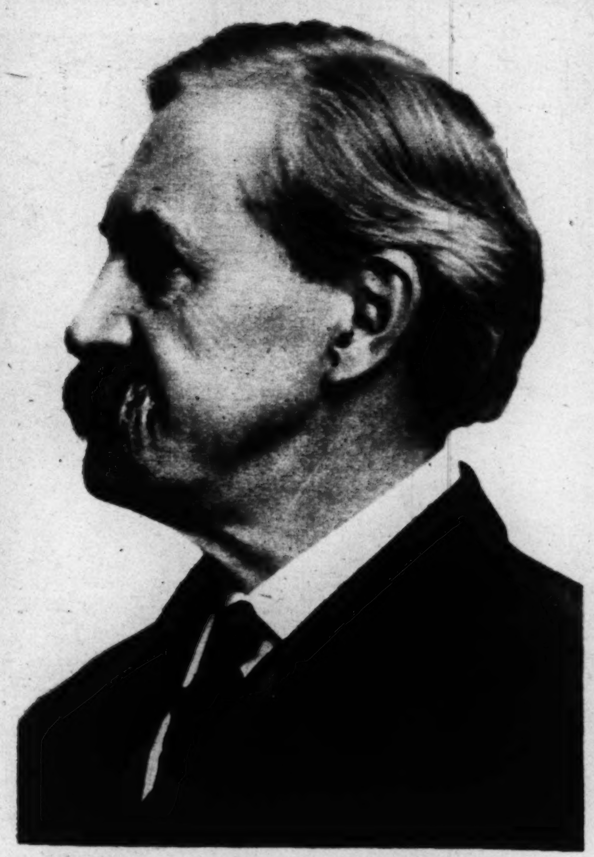
Former Vice President and former Senator Fairbanks has not been living in Washington for the last seven years. He and Mrs. Fairbanks, who has since died, were prominent and popular figures socially. They occupied the house which is now the home of the Washington club, and which was afterwards used for the Russian embassy, until Russia bought the George M. Pullman house in Sixteenth street. Mrs. Fairbanks served two terms as president-general of the D. A. R. and was probably the most all around popular woman who ever held that difficult position. There are three sons, who were little known in Washington, and one daughter, who was well known and very popular. She is the wife of Lt. Commander John W. Timmons, U. S. N.

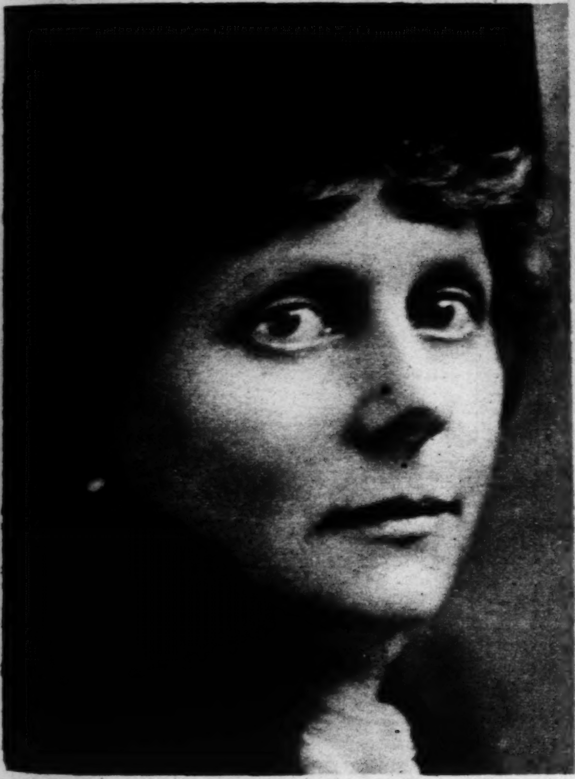
(Photo by Harris & Ewing.)

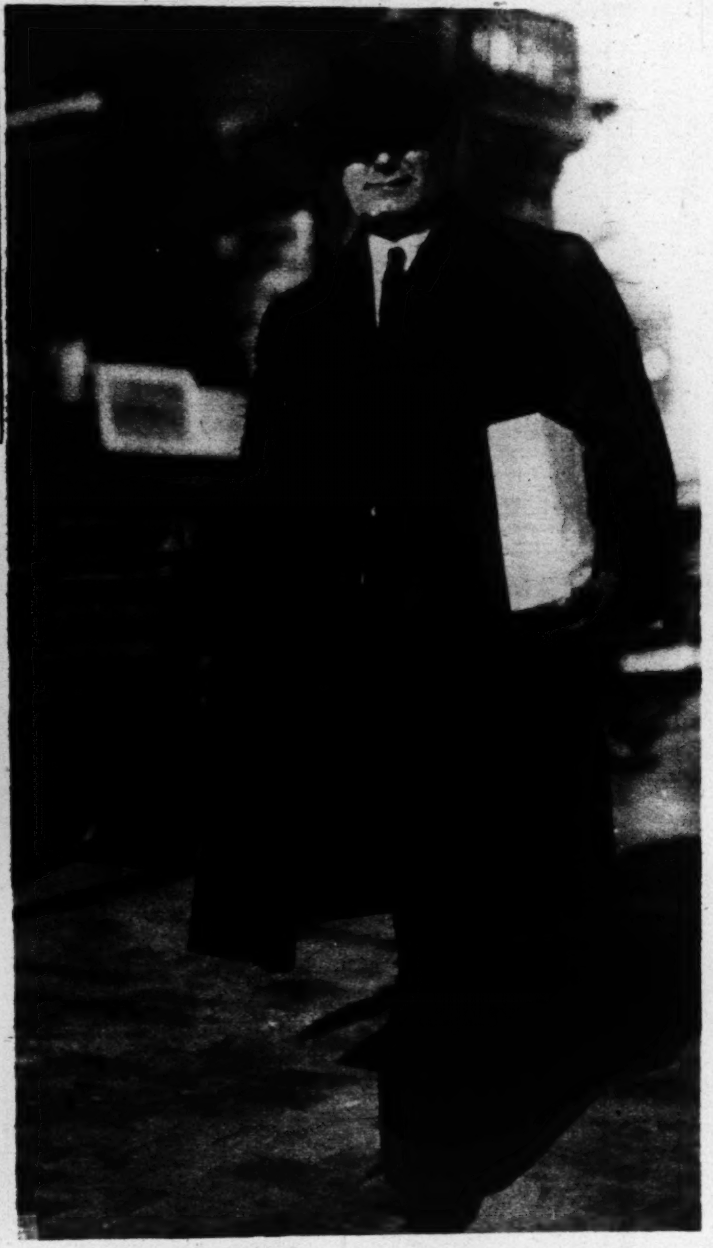




Senator Albert Baird Cummins of Iowa, having served his state in various capacities, including three terms as governor, was sent to the U. S. senate to fill out Senator Allison's term when that veteran died in November, 1908. He was re-elected in 1909, for a full term, and again in 1915, his present term expiring in 1921. Mrs. Cummins has proved a gracious hostess, and is popular in Washington society, though there are obviously other things that interest her more. She has always been keenly interested in her husband's career, and follows his campaigns enthusiastically. She has been prominently identified with the D. A. R. and has from time to time been discussed as a possible president-general of that organization, but has never appeared to be keenly interested in that proposition. She has never become so wedded to Washington as to lose interest in her Des Moines home. Senator and Mrs. Cummins have one daughter, Mrs. Hollie Rawson of Des Moines, who lives next door to them in the Iowa capital. And Mrs. Rawson has two sons, a boy of 16, who, his grandfather declares proudly, "is about ready for college," and a little chap of 8, just beginning his school career.

(Photos by Harris & Ewing.)





Senator William E. Borah is a progressive. He has progressed from Illinois, where he was born (at Springfield in 1865), to Kansas, where he graduated from the University of Kansas, and where for a while he practiced law; and to Boise, Idaho, in 1891, where he built up a considerable practice and married Miss Mamie McConnell. He first gained national fame through prosecution of the government land fraud cases, and in 1907 came to the senate, where he and his colleague, the late Senator Heywood, made a most picturesque pair, being inevitably on opposite sides of every possible question, Heywood being a most conservative stand patter and Borah a radical progressive. The Borahs have no children. Mrs. Borah is an attractive woman, who presides over an attractive home out on Wyoming avenue. She is not very strong and has never felt equal to plunging into the hurly burly of Washington society, though she has during the past winter done rather more entertaining than had been her custom previously. She is fond of motoring and has a little car which she drives herself.

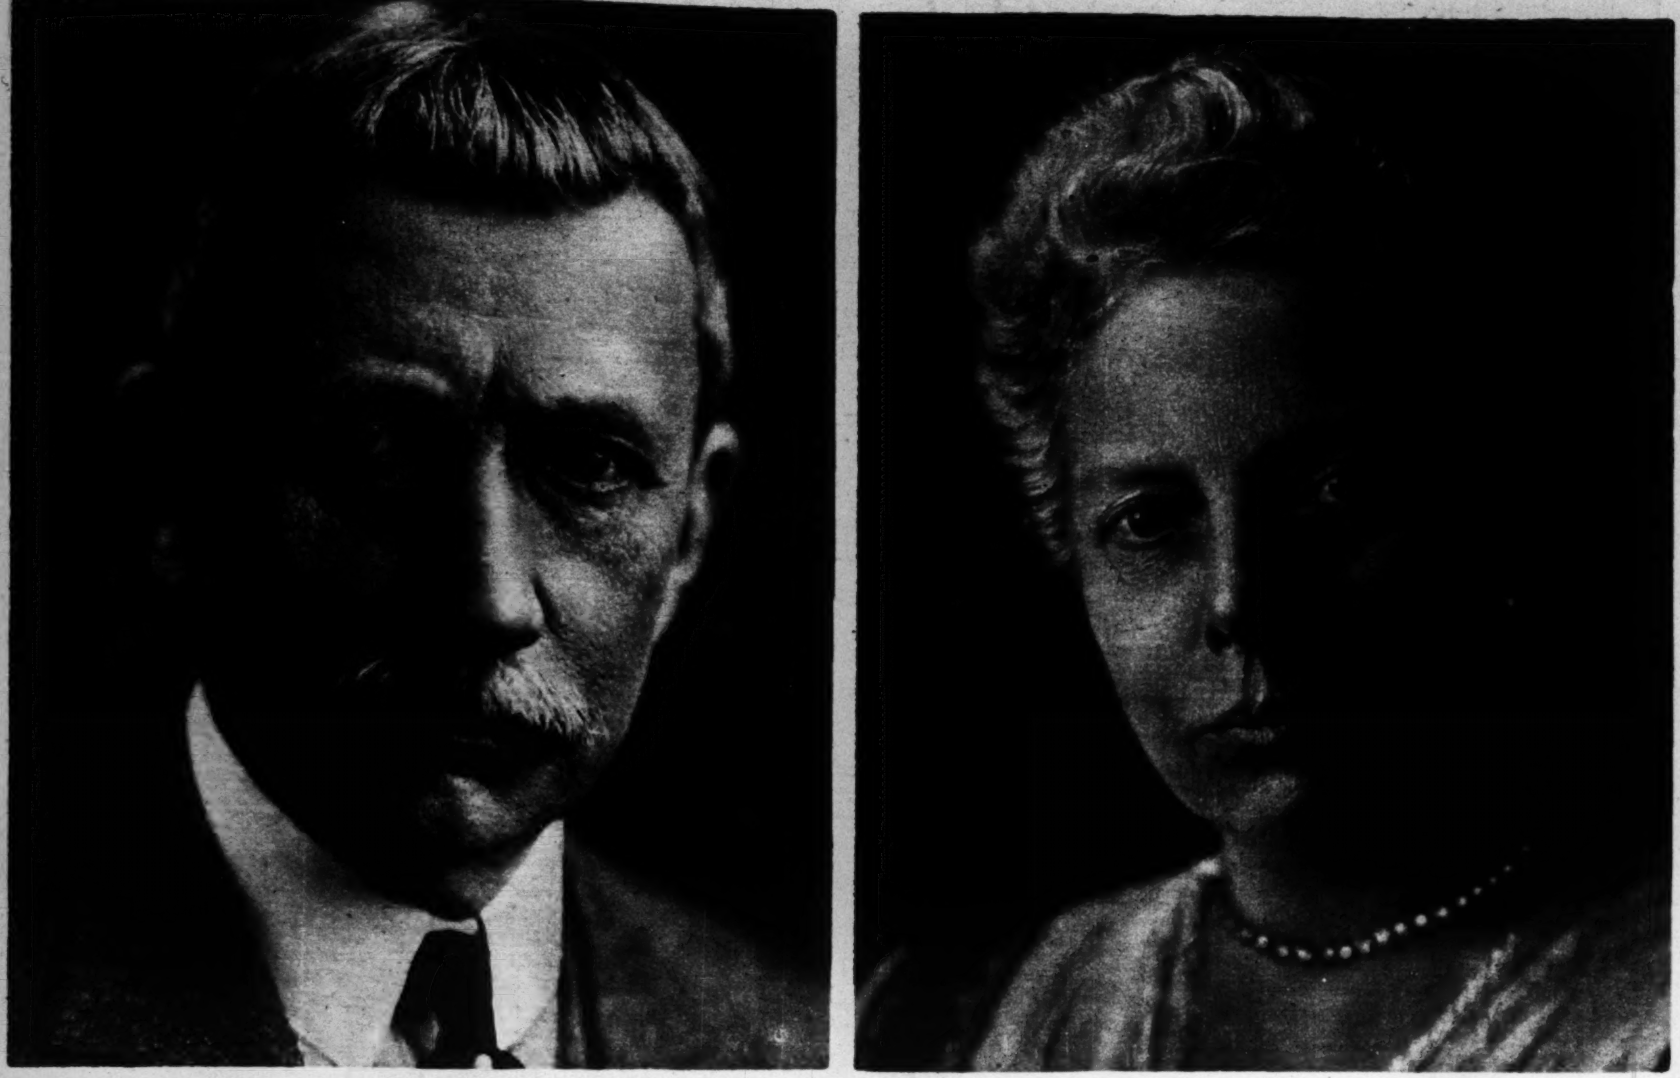
Senator John W. Weeks of Massachusetts has a fine record of service, both to his own state and in national affairs—an Annapolis graduate, he has always kept an interest in naval affairs, serving in the volunteer navy during the Spanish-American war in the Massachusetts Naval brigade. He served five terms in the house before coming to the senate as Murray Crane's successor. He is a standpat conservative. So is Mrs. Weeks—a woman who goes in for the most exclusive circles socially—will not have her phone listed, and is horrified at seeing her name or her photograph in print. They have two children—Mrs. John W. Davidge, who lives in Washington, and Charles Sinclair Weeks of Massachusetts. (Photo by Harris & Ewing.)

Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman is new to Washington, but well known in Illinois. He is a rugged, picturesque figure, and has made more important speeches than is usual to a man so new to the senate. He is a widower with one small daughter, Virginia, aged 7, born on Lincoln's birthday, 1909, to whom he is peculiarly devoted. He was speaker of the Illinois house during the Lorimer agitation, and was elected to fill out Lorimer's term when he was finally declared not legally elected to the U. S. senate. Senator Sherman was re-elected to a full term on his own account, which will expire in 1921. (Photos by Harris & Ewing.)

James R. Mann is an Illinoisan, born in Bloomington, educated at the University of Illinois, and resident of Chicago. He has been alderman from the Thirty-second ward in Chicago, chairman of state and county Republican conventions, master in chancery of the Superior court, general attorney for the South Park board, and member of the Fifty-fifth, Fifty-seventh, and from Fifty-eighth to the Sixty-third congresses from the Second Illinois district. He is now officially leader of the Republican minority in the lower house. Mrs. Mann was Miss Emma Columbia of Champaign, Ill. (Photos by Harris & Ewing.)



Elihu Root, chief engineer on the steam roller of the 1912 convention, was secretary of war under McKinley and secretary of state under Roosevelt. He began his career as a professor of political science and is accounted one of the best authorities on international law in the country. Known as an "icicle" in temperament, with a biting wit that becomes sarcastic at times. Analytical, shrewd, and earnest are the adjectives best describing him. Was awarded the Nobel Peace prize for 1912. Member of the Alaska Boundary tribunal in 1903; counsel for the United States in the North Atlantic Fisheries arbitration, 1910; president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Mrs. Root, who was Miss Clara Wales, daughter of Salem H. Wales of New York, is reticent like her husband and loath to engage in social activities.

WHY CUTTING RUINS THE CUTICLE

How you can keep the cuticle smooth and firm with the new liquid Cuticle Remover

All specialists say that in caring for the nails, one's whole effort should be to keep the cuticle unbroken.

When the cuticle is trimmed or cut away, the skin about the base of the nail becomes dry and ragged. It constantly roughs up, forms hangnails, and makes the hand hideously unattractive.

To meet the need for a harmless cuticle remover a formula has been especially worked out. Cutex, the liquid cuticle remover, now makes it possible for you to have shapely, symmetrical nails without clipping or cutting. This cuticle remover is scientifically correct, is easy to use, and takes half the time required for the old-fashioned cutting method. The moment you use Cutex, you realize that you have found, at last, the one simple, successful way to take care of the cuticle.

One application makes a decided improvement.

Test Cutex on your nails. You will find orange stick and absorbent cotton in the package. Apply Cutex to the base of the nail, gently pushing back the cuticle. Almost at once you can wipe off the dead surplus skin with a soft towel. Rinse the hands in clear water. A little Cutex Nail White—a soft, white cream—thoroughly cleanses and removes discolorations. Cutex Nail Polish gives just the quick, waterproof polish you want.

After one Cutex manicure examine your nails. You will be amazed at the improvement. Use the Cutex method regularly and, no matter how the cuticle may have been mutilated by cutting, no matter how ugly and inflamed cutting has made the skin around the base of your nails, they will soon take on the nice, smooth outline, the well-kept shapeliness that makes any hand lovely.

Start today to make this improvement.

Ask for the Cutex Manicure Specialties wherever high class toilet articles are sold. Used in the most delicate surgical operations.

Fight disease as they do in the hospitals

Hospitals cannot take chances; they must know that the disinfectant they use makes surroundings and conditions absolutely sanitary and aseptic.

Boston is noted the world over for its hospitals. All of the leading ones use

CABOT'S

Sylpho-Nathol

None genuine without this signature

They use it constantly as an antiseptic in the most delicate surgical operations, and as a disinfectant. The disinfectant and antiseptic which these leading hospitals use is just as necessary in your home.

The United States Government has pointed out that many so-called disinfectants have no more germ-killing value than water. Be safe—ask for Sylpho-Nathol and see that you get it.

Used as antiseptic—for cuts, wounds, bruises, bites and stings; relieves pain; prevents infection. As a gargle, for sore throat. As a douche.

As a disinfectant—for kitchen sinks, garbage pail, closet, cellar, waste pipes. In the sick-room and for general cleaning.

For toilet uses—tired, aching feet; perspiration odors; bath and shampoo.

Very economical. Always used in water. Many times stronger than carbolic acid, but safe to use.

Endorsed by authorities

Approved and endorsed by Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Director of Good Housekeeping Bureau of Foods, Sanitation and Health, and by Professor L. B. Allyn, Director of the Westfield Laboratories.

Sylpho-Nathol comes in bottles of four sizes—10c, 25c, 50c and $1.00. Sent prepaid on receipt of price if your druggist hasn't it. Booklet giving uses and directions with each bottle. The Sulpho-Nathol Co., 31 Medford Street, Boston, Mass.
